P R E F A C E.

MANY years ago it was the desire of George Wilson that verses written by his Cousin, James Russell, should be printed along with some by himself, and that the volume should bear the title given to this one ; but the unfinished state of the poem "The Sleep of the Hyacinth" induced delay. The long cherished project has now been carried out, and it is believed that this memorial of love will prove acceptable to the friends of both the Cousins who speak in its pages.

TO THE STETHOSCOPE.

The Stethoscope, as most, probably, of our readers are aware, is a short, straight, wooden tube, shaped like a small post-horn. By means of it, the medical man can listen to the sounds which accompany the movements of the lungs and heart; and as certain murmurs accompany the healthy action of these organs, and certain others mark their diseased condition, an experienced physician can readily discover not only the extent, but also the nature of the distemper which afflicts his patient, and foretell more or less accurately the fate of the latter.

The Stethoscope has long ceased to excite merely professional interest. There are few families to whom it has not proved an object of horror and the saddest remembrance, as connected with the loss of dear relatives, though it is but a revealer, not a producer, of physical suffering.

As an instrument on which the hopes and fears, and one may also say the destinies of mankind, so largely hang, it appears to present a fit subject for poetic treatment. How far the present attempt to carry out this idea is successful, the reader must determine.

STETHOSCOPE! thou simple tube,
Clarion of the yawning tomb,
Unto me thou seem'st to be
A very trump of doom.

Wielding thee, the grave physician
By the trembling patient stands,
Like some deftly skilled musician ;
Strange! the trumpet in his hands.
Whilst the sufferer's eyeball glistens
Full of hope and full of fear,
Quietly he bends and listens
With his quick, accustomed ear—
Waiteth until thou shalt tell Tidings of the war within :
In the battle and the strife,
Is it death, or is it life,
That the fought-for prize shall win ?

Then thou whisperest in his ear
Words which only he can hear—
Words of wo and words of cheer.

Jubilatès thou hast sounded,
Wild exulting songs of gladness ;
Misererès have abounded
Of unutterable sadness.

Sometimes may thy tones impart
Comfort to the sad at heart ;
Oftener, when thy lips have spoken,
Eyes have wept, and hearts have broken.

Calm and grave physician, thou
Art like a crownèd KING ;
Though there is not round thy brow
A bauble golden ring,
As a Czar of many lands,
Life and Death are in thy hands.
Sceptre-like, that Stethoscope
Seemeth in thy hands to wave :

As it points, thy subject goeth
Downwards to the silent grave ;
Or thy kingly power to save
Lifts him from a bed of pain,
Breaks his weary bondage-chain,
And bids him be a man again.

Like a PRIEST beside the altar
Bleeding victims sacrificing,
Thou dost stand, and dost not falter
Whatsoe'er their agonising :
Death lifts up his dooming finger,
And the Flamen may not linger !

PROPHET art thou, wise physician,
Down the future calmly gazing,
Heeding not the strange amazing
Features of the ghastly vision.
Float around thee shadowy crowds,
Living shapes in coming shrouds ;—

Brides with babes, in dark graves sleeping
That still sleep which knows no waking ;
Eyes all bright, grown dim with weeping ;
Hearts all joy, with anguish breaking ;
Stalwart men to dust degraded ;
Maiden charms by worms invaded ;
Cradle songs as funeral hymns ;
Mould'ring bones for living limbs ;
Stately looks, and angel faces,
Loving smiles, and winning graces,
Turned to skulls with dead grimaces.
All the future, like a scroll,
Opening out, that it may show,
Like the ancient Prophet's roll,
Mourning, lamentation, anguish,
Grief, and every form of wo.

On a couch with kind gifts laden,
Flowers around her, books beside her,
Knowing not what shall betide her,

Languishes a gentle maiden.
Cold and glassy is her bright eye,
Hectic red her hollow cheek,
Tangled the neglected ringlets,
Wan the body, thin and weak ;
Like thick cords, the swelling blue veins
Shine through the transparent skin ;
Day by day some fiercer new pains
Vex without, or war within :
Yet she counts it but a passing,
Transient, accidental thing ;
Were the summer only here,
It would healing bring !
And with many a fond deceit
Tries she thus her fears to cheat :
“ When the cowslip’s early bloom
Quite hath lost its rich perfume ;
When the violet’s fragrant breath
Tasted have the lips of death ;
When the snowdrop long hath died,

And the primrose at its side
    In its grave is sleeping ;
When the lilies all are over,
And amongst the scented clover
    Merry lambs are leaping ;
When the swallow's voice is ringing
    Through the echoing azure dome,
    Saying, ' From my far-off home
I have come, my wild way winging
O'er the waves, that I might tell,
As of old, I love ye well.
Hark ! I sound my silver bell ;
All the happy birds are singing
    From each throat
    A merry note,
Welcome to my coming bringing.'
When that happy time shall be,
From all pain and anguish free,
I shall join you, full of life and full of glee,"

Then, thou fearful Stethoscope !
Thou dost seem thy lips to ope,
Saying, " Bid farewell to hope :
I foretell thee days of gloom,
I pronounce thy note of doom—
Make thee ready for the tomb !
Cease thy weeping, tears avail not,
Pray to God thy courage fail not.
He who knoweth no repenting,
Sympathy or sad relenting,
Will not heed thy sore lamenting—
Death, who soon will be thy guide
To his couch, will hold thee fast ;
As a lover at thy side
Will be with thee to the last,
Longing for thy latest gasp,
When within his iron grasp
As his bride he will thee clasp."

Shifts the scene. The Earth is sleeping,

With her weary eyelids closed,
Hushed by darkness into slumber ;
Whilst in burning ranks disposed,
High above, in countless number,
All the heavens in radiance steeping,
Watch and ward
And loving guard
O'er her rest the stars are keeping.

Often has the turret-chime
Of the hasty flight of time
Warning utterance given ;
And the stars are growing dim
On the grey horizon's rim,
In the dawning light of heaven.
But there sits, the Bear out-tiring,
As if no repose requiring,
One pale youth, all unattending
To the hour ; with bright eye bending
O'er the loved and honoured pages,

Where are writ the words of sages,
And the heroic deeds and thoughts of far distant ages.

Closed the book,
With gladsome look
Still he sits and visions weaveth.
Fancy with her wiles deceiveth ;
Days to come with glory gildeth ;
And though all is bleak and bare,
With perverset labour buildeth
Wondrous castles in the air.
He who shall possess each palace,
Fortune has for him no malice,
Only countless joys in store :
Over rim,
And mantling brim,
His full cup of life shall pour.
Whilst he dreams,
The future seems

Like the present spread before him :
Nought to fear him,
All to cheer him,
Coming greatness gathers o'er him ;
And into the ear of Night
Thus he tells his visions bright :—

“ I shall be a glorious Poet !
All the wond'ring world shall know it,
Listening to melodious hymning ;
I shall write immortal songs.

“ I shall be a Painter limning
Pictures that shall never fade ;
Round the scenes I have portrayed
Shall be gathered gazing throngs :
Mine shall be a Titian's palette !

“ I shall wield a Phidias' mallet !
Stone shall grow to life before me,

Looks of love shall hover o'er me,
Beauty shall in heart adore me
That I make her charms immortal.
Now my foot is on the portal
Of the house of Fame :
Soon her trumpet shall proclaim
Even this now unhonoured name,
And the doings of this hand
Shall be known in every land.

" Music ! my bewitching pen
Shall enchant the souls of men.
Aria, fugue, and strange sonata,
Opera, and gay cantata,
Through my brain,
In linkèd train,
Hark ! I hear them winding go,
Now with half-hushed whisper stealing,
Now in full-voiced accent pealing,
Ringing loud, and murmuring low.

Scarcely can I now refrain,
Whilst these blessed notes remain,
From pouring forth one undying angel-strain.

“Eloquence! my lips shall speak
As no living lips have spoken—
Advocate the poor and weak,
Plead the cause of the heart-broken;
Listening senates shall be still,
I shall wield them at my will,
And this little tongue, the earth
With its burning words shall fill.

“Ye stars which bloom like flowers on high,
Ye flowers which are the stars of earth,
Ye rocks that deep in darkness lie,
Ye seas that with a loving eye
Gaze upwards on the azure sky,
Ye waves that leap with mirth;

Ye elements in constant strife,
Ye creatures full of bounding life :
I shall unfold the hidden laws,
And each unthought-of wondrous cause,
    That waked ye into birth.
A high-priest I, by Nature taught
    Her mysteries to reveal :
The secrets that she long hath sought
    In darkness to conceal
Shall have their mantle rent away,
And stand uncovered to the light of day.
O Newton ! thou and I shall be
    Twin brothers then !
Together linked, our names shall sound
    Upon the lips of men."

Like the sullen heavy boom
    Of a signal gun at sea,
When athwart the gathering gloom,
Awful rocks are seen to loom

Frowning on the lee ;
Like the muffled kettle-drum,
    With the measured tread,
And the wailing trumpet's hum,
    Telling that a soldier's dead ;
Like the deep cathedral bell
Tolling forth its doleful knell,
Saying, " Now the strife is o'er,
Death hath won a victim more "—
So, thou doleful Stethoscope !
    Thou dost seem to say,
" Hope thou on against all hope,
    Dream thy life away :
    Little is there now to spend ;
    And that little's near an end.
    Saddest sign of thy condition
Is thy bounding wild ambition ;
Only dying eyes can gaze on so bright a vision.
Ere the spring again is here,

Low shall be thy head,
Vainly shall thy mother dear,
Strive her breaking heart to cheer,
Vainly strive to hide the tear
Oft in silence shed.
Pangs and pains are drawing near,
To plant with thorns thy bed :
Lo ! they come, a ghastly troop,
Like fierce vultures from afar ;
Where the bleeding quarry is,
There the eagles gathered are !
Ague chill, and fever burning,
Soon away, but swift returning,
In unceasing alternation ;
Cold and clammy perspiration,
Heart with sickening palpitation,
Panting, heaving respiration ;
Aching brow, and wasted limb,
Troubled brain, and vision dim,
Hollow cough like dooming knell,

Saying, ' Bid the world farewell !'
Parchèd lips, and quenchless thirst,
Everything as if accurst ;
Nothing to the senses grateful ;
All things to the eye grown hateful ;
Flowers without the least perfume ;
Gone from everything its bloom ;
Music but an idle jangling ;
Sweetest tongues but weary wrangling ;
Books, which were most dearly cherished,
Come to be, each one, disrelished ;
Clearest plans grown all confusion ;
Kindest friends but an intrusion :

    Weary day, and weary night—

    Weary night, and weary day ;

    Would God it were the morning light !

    Would God the light were passed away !

And when all is dark and dreary,
And thou art all worn and weary,
When thy heart is sad and cheerless,

And thine eyes are seldom tearless,
When thy very soul is weak,
Satan shall his victim seek.
Day by day he will be by thee,
Night by night will hover nigh thee,
With accursèd wiles will try thee,
Soul and spirit seek to buy thee.
Faithfully he'll keep his tryst,
Tell thee that there is no Christ,
No long-suffering gracious Father,
But an angry tyrant rather ;
No benignant Holy Spirit,
Nor a heaven to inherit,
Only darkness, desolation,
Hopelessness of thy salvation,
And at best annihilation.

“ God with His great power defend thee !
Christ with His great love attend thee !
May the blessed Spirit lend thee

Strength to bear, and all needful succour send thee !”

Close we here. My eyes behold,
As upon a sculpture old,
Life all warm and Death all cold
Struggling which alone shall hold—
Sign of woe, or sign of hope !—
To his lips the Stethoscope.

But the strife at length is past,
They have made a truce at last,
And the settling die is cast.
Life shall sometimes sound a blast,
But it shall be but “Tantivy,”
Like a hurrying war reveillie,
Or the hasty notes that levy
Eager horse, and man, and hound,
On an autumn morn,
When the sheaves are off the ground,

And the echoing bugle-horn Sends them racing o'er the scanty stubble corn.

But when I a-hunting go,
I, King Death,
I that funeral trump shall blow
With no bated breath.

Long drawn out, and deep and slow
Shall the wailing music go ;
Winding horn shall presage meet
Be of coming winding-sheet,

And all living men shall know
That beyond the gates of gloom,
In my mansions of the tomb,
I for every one keep room,
And shall hold and house them all, till the very Day of Doom.

THE WINGS OF THE DOVE AND THE EAGLE.

"Oh that I had wings like a dove, for then would I fly away, and be at rest!"—Psalm lv. 6.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength: they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."—Isa. xl. 31.

As I lay upon my bed,
Weeping and complaining,
Turning oft my weary head,
Hope and help disdaining;
Lo! before mine eyes there stood,
Vision of an ancient wood
Full of happy birds pursuing
Each the other with keenest zest,
And I heard the plaintive cooing
Issuing from the turtle's nest,

Till I murmured at the sight,
And forgot God's high behest ;
" Had I but your wings, I might Fly away and be at rest."

Then the low, sweet plaintive cooing
Of the fond maternal birds,
Seemed itself with thoughts imbuing,
And at length flowed forth in words.

" Plumes of doves and fluttering wings
Are but vain and feeble things,
Timidly the air they fan ;
Scarcely would they serve to raise thee,
Need the truth at all amaze thee,
O'er this earth a little span.
Look thou there : " and lo ! an eagle,
From his nest amidst the stars,
Stood before me, with his regal
Front, and venerable scars.

In a moment, wide extending
His great wings, (so seemed my dream,)
He was in the air ascending
With a wild, exulting scream.
Fiercest winds, and rude blasts blowing,
Could not stop his bold careering,
Higher still and higher going
He kept ever upwards steering,
Till I lost him in the zenith,
Far above the mid-day sun,
Where he seemed like one that winneth
Rest in heaven when work is done.

“Judge thou then,” the voice said, “whether
This or that’s the better thing—
Rainbow-tinted dove’s soft feather,
Or the eagle’s ruffled wing?”
“That’s the better!”—“Rest then still;
In thy heart of hearts abase thee;
Lose thy will in God’s great will,

By-and-by He will upraise thee,
In His own good time and season,
When 'tis meet that thou shouldst go,
And will show thee fullest reason
Why He kept thee here below.
Wings of doves shall not be given ;
But to lift thee up to heaven
Thou shalt have entire dominion
O'er the eagle's soaring pinion,
Thou shalt mount to God's own eyrie
And become a crownèd saint,
Thou shalt run and not be weary,
Walk, and never faint ;
Therefore, utter no complaint."

Now I lie upon my bed,
Saying, " Be it even so,
I will wait in faith and hope
Till the eagle's wings shall grow."

A SABBATH MORNING;

IN THE COUNTRY.

How manifold, oh Lord our God,
Thy works of wisdom be !
How wonderful, how merciful,
Thy doings which we see !
With one acclaim they praise Thy name—
A large rejoicing band,
The things in air, and sea, and sky,
The creatures on the land.
The birds join hymns amid the leaves
(One up beside the sun) ;
With pleasant lay no less than they
The lightsome brooks do run ;
A gentle breeze amid the trees
Just sounds above the calm,

And waves astir upon the main
Roll up a distant psalm.
Yea, things around that have no sound
Do also language raise,
They shine, they thrill with deep delight,
They cannot choose but praise :
The holy hush of sky above,
The sunny light, the hills,
The little crowd of calm white cloud,
The flowers beside the rills.
'Tis nature that before her King
Both fears and doth rejoice,
She partly holds her breath in awe,
And partly utters voice.
Thus in this wide and archèd scene—
As in a church—to-day
I hear the creatures of the Lord
Together praise and pray.
Lord, why should this not ever be ?
Why should a tempest wake,

A cloud, a night, a death, a pain,
This choir and brightness break ?
And why in us should sinful thought
Disturb our adoration—
Why should not Thou have glory meet
From all Thy fair creation ?

Yet let us cease all pining thought
Amid this placid hour,
Our spirits shall receive in joy
Its sweet and serious power ;
A holy Presence all about
Amid the light doth dwell,
As if the glory stole from Heaven
To commune visible.
The shadow of the Almighty wing
Is hung all nature o'er,
It needs must be such souls as we Shall tremble and adore.
Within my depths of soul I kneel,

God standeth me so near ;
He looketh nigh upon my eye,
He soundeth in my ear.

And lo ! my spirit all elate,
All nerved and winged with love,
In buoyance irresistible
Is carried up above ;
From this, the lower, outer court,
It pierces to the Place
Where God in everlasting beams
Doth cover up His face ;
Before the Throne, before the Throne,
It shuts its throbbing gaze ;
It falls, with heart weighed down in bliss,
And tongue o'erwhelmed in praise !
I soar into the Heaven above,
His glory here doth fall ;
To the earth and me, He, only He Is God and All in All !

THE SLEEP OF THE HYACINTH.

AN EGYPTIAN POEM.

The following poem, written by GEORGE WILSON at intervals of leisure, had its origin, as his papers inform us, in the fact that a bulbous root, found on the breast of the mummy of an Egyptian princess, grew again when planted. Pondering this fact, interesting to him as a man of science, and permitting it to develop itself in his imaginative mind in all the range of its suggestions, he constructed the poem. "I call the rhyme," he says in one of his letters, "'The Sleep of the Hyacinth : ' it is a mosaic on life, death, and resurrection, natural and spiritual." Had it been finished according to the author's plan, it was to have consisted of six portions, entitled respectively as follows :—

I. THE GARDEN.

II. THE QUEEN AND THE FLOWERS.

III. THE DEATH OF THE QUEEN.

IV. THE ENTOMBMENT OF THE QUEEN AND THE FLOWER.

V. THE SLEEP.

VI. THE AWAKENING.

Of those intended portions the sixth is totally wanting; of the second only a few lines exist, suggesting the subject which the author meant to expand; and both the fourth and fifth portions are incomplete, a gap, here and there, showing where the author purposed to insert stanzas of connexion. Allowing for this incompleteness, and for the absence of corrections for which there are suggestions in the MS., the Poem will, it is believed, be welcomed as a characteristic production of the writer's mind.

I. THE GARDEN.

The ancient Egyptian garden wherein the Hyacinth grew.

THREE thousand years ! three thousand years !
Three thousand long and weary years
Have ceased to be oppressed with fears ;
Have wept their latest, bitter tears ;
Have drowned the echo of the cheers
That stirred their life awhile :
Have hushed to stillest rest their noise ;
Have left to other years their toys ;
Have lost the memory of their joys,
And long forgot to smile ;
Have cast away their wings, and fled
To join the ghosts of centuries dead
That track the steps of Time, Since, watered by the abounding Nile
In Egypt's favoured clime,
A Garden stretched where now the sand

Has ruined that delightful land—
A Garden such as mortal eye
Has never seen on Northern shore ;
So plenteous were the flowers it bore,
So proudly did its trees on high
Lift their crowned foreheads to the sky,
And dare the burning sun
To blast them with his fiery eye,
To bid them his caresses shun,
Or make them wither, droop, or die.
Their glorious beauty could defy
The fervour of his ardent gaze ;
Their tints were borrowed from his rays ;
They loved to meet his noontide blaze ;
He could not do them ill ;
For round about their feet were swathed
Thick, mossy, verdant carpets, bathed
In moisture spread by many a rill
Which, winding from the teeming river,
Flowed in refreshing streams for ever.

The palm was there with fluttering leaves
The warm air fanning ;
The sycamore with outspread boughs,
Like arches overspanning ;
And all between,
Enrobed in green,
Myrtles and fragrant shrubs adorned the scene.

Among their leaves was many a nest,
From which, as from its night of rest
Each happy bird awoke,
A hymn of gladness broke,
And midst the sound of rustling wings,
Rose their Hosannah
To the King of kings.
High over these the tall banana
Lifted its head, like some Sultana
With glory crowned :
And through its leafy screen,
Tinting the light of green,

Spread a refreshing coolness all around,
And with its grateful shadow curtained o'er the ground.

The pomegranate upon the grass
Showered down its blood-red petals,
Like fluttering chips of burnished metals.
With armour bright of glowing brass,
And wings of gauze in colours shining,
Like ores which have through much refining,
And many a process come,
Hovered around the citron tree,
Filling the air with drowsy hum,
The broad-winged butterfly, the busy bee,
And mailed beetles many a one,
Idling the hours,
Among the flowers,
From dawn of day, till set the evening sun.
Round the thick boughs and gnarlèd stems,
Where'er its clasping tendrils could entwine,

Laden with clusters like dark ruby gems,
Wound like a serpent the embracing vine,
And climbing to the topmost spray,
Out of the cunning fox's way, Let its ripe bunches peep, out from among the leaves,
Like birds nestled in nooks of shady cottage-eaves.

The golden spheres of the orange-trees
Were tossed about by the playful breeze,
And bowled along the lawn :
The blossoms pale of the almond shed
Their hoary honours around the head
Of the parent stem when all else was dead,
And like flakes of snow on the ground were strawn.

The lemon flowers grew dim of sight,
And closed their drowsy eyes at night,
But opened them wide at the dawn.
The burly gourd, and the melon round,

Lazily rolled upon the ground ;
And beneath their leaves the cucumber wound,
Like a snake about on a bird to bound.
The plum-trees laden with many years,
Mourned their old age in trickling tears
Of balsam and of gum ;
And noisy chatter and happy hum
Showed how the busy birds made merry
On the nectarine's cheek, and each juicy berry,
And drank the blood of the crimson cherry.

And many another tree was there :
The acacia with its yellow hair,
The fig-tree and the lime ;
The fairest things appeared more fair
In that delightful clime,
Where piercing north-blasts never blow,
Nor chills the bleak east wind,
Where falleth never hail or snow
To leave its blight behind,

But an eternal summer breathes
And from a horn of plenty fills,
And with a crown of beauty wreathes
The Everlasting Hills.

From every clime and every shore,
Whatever choicest plant it bore,
By tributary nation sent,
Gave to that Garden ornament.<sup>1</sup>
A thousand stately flowers stood up,
With chiselled stem and carved cup,
With sculptured urns ; with hanging bells ;
With trumpet-tubes ; with honey-cells
Wherein the bee found endless wells
Of nectar to be sipped,
And even the wasp forgot his malice,
When quaffing at each brimming chalice,
And sheathed his sword, with poison tipped.
Some bore their heads like butterflies,

With plumes and fluttering wings,
And others wore rare ornaments,
Like crowns of queens and kings.
And some spread out like banners
Hung o'er a dungeon-keep,
And others were all hollowed out
And chased like goblets deep,
In which the drunken gnat could sleep
His day's debauch away,
And many a stealthy worm would creep
And make the buds his prey.
The bulrush grew at the water's edge,
With the paper-reed and the sword-leaved sedge,
Each with its root stuck down like a wedge
In the bed of the marshy pool;
And wherever the waters were clear and cool,
They were fringed by the oleander,
Whose rosy petals love to be

Where they can their own beauty see,
And blow where rills meander :
Or at the side of some still lake,
Where sea and sky
Gaze eye to eye,
And of each other's charms partake.
The rainbow-tinted iris,
And the slender asphodels,
Nodded gaily to each other
With a graceful, easy motion ;
And pouted out their lips,
Like those curious Eastern shells
That have palaces to dwell in
At the bottom of the ocean.
The narcissus gazed with wonder
On his beauty in the stream ;
And between his leaves and under
Glowed the crocus' golden gleam :
And the tulip's deep-mouthed pitcher
Stood erect upon her stem,

For she knew her flowers were richer,
    Though no fragrance rose from them,
Than the petals of the wild thyme
    That nestled at her feet,
And the marjoram or lavender,
    Though their breath is very sweet.
The poppy with his scarlet plumes
    Was like a soldier tall,
But the tallest was the hollyhock,
    For he rose above them all;
And with trumpets stood the columbine,
    As if to sound a call
At which the flowers should wake from rest,
    And into ranks should fall,
As the bugle makes the soldier start,
    And the steed neigh in his stall.
The floating white cups of the lotus lilies
    With all their bravery of leaves, were there;
The yellow petals of the daffodillies

Breathed forth their perfume to the passing air ;

And clustered chalices of amaryllis,
Some delicately fair,
Stood robed in white,
And others rosy bright,
Crowned on the summit of their stately stems

With crimson flowers like queenly diadems.
The dark-eyed violet, sending Forth its fragrance, when the wind blows,
The lowly lily of the valley bending
At the feet of the rose.

The rose herself, stately and tall
Over them all
As a queen reigning,
Lowlier things and their homage disdaining ;
The heliotrope for ever turning
With eager eye to meet the burning
Glances of the god of day :

The towering forms, the long array
Of sunflowers with their starry faces ;
The cistus with its fleeting graces ;
And other bright flowers Fanned by the winds, and unharmed by the showers,
Filled with their beauty the far-spreading bowers.

II. THE QUEEN AND THE FLOWERS.

A young Egyptian princess, daughter of one of the Pharaohs, the Queen of the Garden, walks in it, in the fulness of life. The vision is but a glimpse, for this part of the poem is unfinished.

WITHIN the garden lived a maid,
Of noble figure as became a Queen ;
A gentle, graceful and majestic creature
With beauty written on each noble feature,

And wearing such a regal mien
That they who watched it, said,
“ This is no queen whom man has crowned,
But one whom God has made.”

III. THE DEATH OF THE QUEEN.

Death visits the Egyptian Eden ; the Princess feels his approach, shrinks despairingly, invokes help from gods and men, and dies.

WITHIN the earliest Eden
The tempter sought his prey :
From every later scene of bliss
He tries to steal the bliss away,
And oftentimes prevails.
For doubt, and woe, and want, and fear,
And grief, and guilt, and sin
Are ever ready, standing near
To tempt the tempter in.

And neither youth, nor love, nor hope,
Nor beauty's fading flower,
Nor childhood's joy, nor manhood's strength,
Its purpose or its power,
Can keep away
The evil day,
Or long avert the hour
When grief must come.
The smiter striketh home:
The cup of sorrow circleth round,
And though we quail and shrink,
To pass it by
No one may try,
But all must bend and drink.
For Christ's dear flock
There doth remain,
A place of rest
From toil and pain,
And God himself on high,
Away from every eye,

Shall wipe off every tear ;
But we have no abiding city here.

A morning came : all looked serenely bright,
As the Queen walked forth in the early air ;
The sun unrisen to his mid-day height,
Showed but the forelocks of his golden hair.

Unearthly beauty spread on all around
A glory she had never seen before ;
Death, who keeps treading an impartial round,
Seemed to have passed the happy garden o'er.

All was so full of life, of love, of God,
All sang so joyously His kindly care,
From the small mosses nestling in the sod,
To the great eagles winging through the air.

“ Oh God ! they praise thee,” sang her happy voice,

“ I cannot hear them, Thou dost hear them all,

We all are Thine ; in Thee we all rejoice,

Giver of good gifts, on Thy name we call.”

So prayed the Queen, and countless happy days

Their long perspective spread before her gaze,

Like sculptured sphinxes, daughters of one mother,

With sister-faces, each one like the other,

Serenely stretched, with sweet looks glancing o'er

The long space leading to the temple-door,

Who seem unending, and who only cease

Where the gate opens, and the soul finds peace :

So gazed the Queen. But lo ! a little cloud

Rose from the sea, shaped like a mummy shroud.

The mid-day came ; the sun was red as blood ;
A dreary horror filled the air ;
The birds sought covert in the thickest wood,
And the fierce lion crouched within his lair.
Death had bethought him of the happy spot,
That smiled so sweetly to the morning sun ;
“ It mocketh me : its beauty I will blot,
Its crown of glory shall be all undone.”
He spared the flowers ; he spared the leafy trees ;
His mark was on them pointing to their prime ;
The merry birds, the murmuring bees,
They could be his at any time.
He left a footmark here and there,
But knowing all was his, he could afford to spare.

With shadowless and soundless tread
He sought the bower where sat the Queen ;

Her heart oppressed with nameless dread,

And wondering at the changèd scene :

“ I come for thee. Doff all thy pride,

I have no time for seeking or for suing ;

Thy place is ready, thou must be my bride ;

This is my way of winning and of wooing ;

The sun bends downwards ; when the stars arise

Prepare to meet me ; thou must be my prize.”

* * * * *

“ Oh ! thou that sleep'st in Philæ's Holy Isle,

Oh ! great Osiris with the gentle heart,

May I behold thy gracious smile !

Oh ! give me with thyself a part

In those delightful regions of the blest,

Where thou to sinless spirits grantest rest.

Ah me ! but who shall, sinless, say

“ I come to claim the meed of good works done ?

Search me and try me ; in the balance weigh ;

Blot of transgression on my soul is none.”

Or who shall, disembodied, throw

Himself on certain bliss where all perhaps is woe ?

“ Oh, God of gods ! if such there be,

And that there is my conscience tells,

How shall I justify myself to Thee,

Being in whom perfection dwells ?

“ I see the stern, relentless judges seated

In solemn circle in the halls below ;

The summons dread the herald has repeated,

And my distracted spirit fears to go

Where, in my utmost need,

No one for me will plead,

Or intercessor use prevailing prayer ;

Where altars do not stand,

Or victims bleed,

Or smoke of incense fill the grateful air ;

But in the gloomy land

Is kept the record of each sinful deed.

“ The impartial balance on its axis moving ;

The needle quivering on the swaying beam ;

The scale, swift rising, and as swift descending

All as if here before me seem :

The avengers, waiting for the heart's last proving,

The awful guardian with his eye of hate,

The observing God his body bending

To watch the action of the shifting weight,

And the despairing spirit's cry ‘ Too late ! ’

As the great judge, his voice extending,

Speaks till the vaults reverberate the sound,—

‘ Heaven on thee closes her unwilling gate, Thou hast been weighed, and wanting found.’<sup>1</sup>

And that there is my conscience tells,
How shall I justify myself to Thee,
Being in whom perfection dwells ?

“ Each long-forgotten crime,
That seemed Like something dreamed,
All blotted out by time ;
So that I deemed
It was no part of me ;
Like hieroglyphic flashing in the sun
Proclaims, ‘ From evil thou hast done
Thou never canst be free.’

<sup>1</sup> Wilkinson, vol. ii. p. 381.

Legions of sins around my bed,
In fierce, vindictive, terrible array,
Gnash with their teeth, and scoff, and say,
‘ Sin hath its hour
Of might and power :
Long have we waited : now is no delay.
They call for thee ! the impatient dead,
And we shall guide thee on the way :
No one shall fail when God will call,
Thou shalt be marshalled by us all,
And we will win thee on the Judgment
Day.’ ”

She started up, and half arose,
As if to battle with her foes,
And wildly round the air she struck
Like one who fights when sore beset,
Then gazed with an imploring look,
Which they who saw could ne’er forget,
So plainly seemed that glance to say,

“ In this, my hour of dark dismay,
Can ye not render other help than only weep and pray ? ”

“ Oh, God of gods ! if such there be,
And that there is my conscience tells,
How shall I justify myself to Thee,
Being in whom perfection dwells ?

“ No Past rolls back behind Thy throne,
No Future spreads before,
A Present, like a boundless sea,
On no side finds a shore.
The universe would rock and reel,
If change should pass on Thee,
What Thou hast been in eldest time,
Thou must through endless ages be.
The holiness that once was Thine
Cannot in Eons pass away ;
With guilt it never can combine ;

“ As yesterday Thou art to-day.
But is there not some wondrous way,
Some all unthought of, glorious plan,
By which, though holy, Thou may'st say
‘ I can be just, yet pardon man ? ’

“ ‘ Have I not heard a legend wild <sup>1</sup>
Of one who, when the years roll on,
Shall come to earth—a woman's child—
And yet thine only Son ;
Who shall to Thee a ransom pay,
And wash the guilt of man away ? ’ ”

She glanced around, and as she ceased,
Quick beckoned to a thoughtful priest :
“ Tell me,” she said, “ this wondrous tale,
Tell me, ye priests, if it ye knew,—
My strength and courage faint and fail,—
I swear you, speak me true

<sup>1</sup> Wilkinson, vol. i. p. 331.

As ye are priests of Him on high,
And as ye shall on deathbeds lie,
Be done with secret things ;
The daughter of a race of kings
Lays her commands on you."

The priests looked grave, but nothing said ;
They deemed it a delirious dream,
Where strangest thoughts together wed,
And phantasies and things that are
No longer with each other war,
But all as real seem.

She read their looks, and bowed her head ;
She crossed her hands, and lowly said,—
" I kneel before Thee in the dust,
Dread God of gods, and King of kings ;
Slay me, if Justice say thou must,
But I will hide beneath Thy wings,
And Thou shalt be my only trust."

All hushed she then, as if to hear
Some message whispered in her ear,
All still she lay, as if to see
Some vision of Divinity.

But Death was fiercely beating
At life's shattered gate,
And scoffed at all entreating
That he awhile should wait.
And senselessness was stealing
O'er the wearied, aching brain,
And every pulse and feeling
Were numbed by cruel pain.
The ear was dull, and dim the eye,
Nor message seemed from Him on high.

Then rose upon the startled air
An awful cry of wild despair,
Which made the trembling hearers start,
And chilled the life-blood in each heart.

But whilst they stood with tortured ear,
Prepared again that sound to hear,
Lo! on the queenly face a change
Had passed, unutterably strange:
The look of pain and woe was gone,
The brow like polished marble shone,
The gleaming eyes were fixed above,
With a fond look of awe and love.
The hands were raised as if to clasp
Something belovèd in their grasp;
The quivering lips essayed awhile
To speak, but only reached a smile;
Then all was still: upon the breast
The folded arms sank down to rest;
The dark eyelashes, like portcullis spears,
Closed fast for ever o'er the gate of tears.
And by their looks the watchers knew
That each the same conclusion drew;
But no one spake, for all amazed
Upon the wondrous vision gazed.

Silence came down on Pharaoh's pile,
Save in that chamber you might hear
Low stifled sobbing and the dropping tear,
And far-off ripple of the murmuring Nile.

IV. THE ENTOMBMENT OF THE QUEEN AND THE FLOWER.

There is mourning in the land of Pharaoh over the dead Princess, whose swathing and entombment, Egyptian-wise, with the Hyacinth-bulb on her breast, are described—the description leading to a glimpse of the Royal Necropolis, or Burying-place, with its rows of the dead who had preceded her, and, then, by transition, to an address of the Mummy to its departed soul.

WOE was in the land of Egypt,
Grief was on the monarch's throne ;
Aged Pharaoh, sad and childless,
Uttered sob and uttered groan ;
Death had won his dearest treasure,
Desolate he stood alone.
From his hand he thrust the sceptre,
From his brow he plucked the crown ;

Royal robe and priestly vesture,
Warrior sword, he flung them down ;
Sackcloth round his loins was girt,
Ashes on his head were strown.

Woe was in the land of Egypt,
On the loftiest and the least ;
Woe on king and woe on people,
Bond and freeman, prince and priest ;
Day and night they uttered wailings,
Lamentations never ceased.

At length the king rose, and he lifted his head,
And he spake but three words, " Bury my dead."
Her delicate body with water they bathed,
And they combed the long locks of her hair,
And her marble-like limbs with linen they swathed,

Imbued with rich spices, and unguents rare
To keep off the breath of the envious air.

They folded her hands for their age-long prayer ;

They laid on her breast,

For its age-long rest,

The bulb of the hyacinth root ;

And, with pious intent and reverend care,

They wound from the head to the foot

The long linen bandages, crossing them round,

Till each motionless limb in its vestment was bound,

And she lay folded up,

Like a flower in its cup

Which has never awakened, and knows but repose,

Like the bud never blown of the sleeping white rose.

So they embalmed that lovely form,

And made that queenly face immortal,
Shutting from his prey the worm,
And barring close the admitting portal ;
And Decay could not enter.

The sycamore-tree in the garden fell,
She would love it they thought in the tomb ;
They hollowed it out, a gloomy deep cell,
A dark, dreary lodge where no queen would dwell,
But she made no complaint, it suited her well ;
There was small enough space, and yet wide enough room ;
The dead are content with a narrow freehold,
And they are not afraid of the gloom.

* * * * *

There were no tossing arms
And no aching heads ;

All their pillows were soft
And downy their beds.
None weary and wakeful lay
Counting each hour,
Missing the drowsy juice
Wrung from the poppy-flower.
None looked for the light ;
None longed for the day,
Grew tired of their couches,
Or wished them away.

The babe lay hushed to a calmer rest
Than ever mother's loving breast
Or fondling arms in life had given,
Or lullaby that rose to heaven
And brought the angels down to guard the cradle-nest.

The husband and the wife,
As once in life,
Slept side by side,

Undreaming of the cares the morning might betide.

The bridegroom and the bride

    Their fill of love might take ;

None kept the lovers now apart ;

    Yet neither to the other spake,
And heart leapt not to heart :

    Death had wooed both,

        And come in room

    To him of loving bride,

        To her of fond bridegroom ;

Yet they slept sweetly

    With closed eyes,

And knew not Death had cheated both,

    And won the prize.

None knelt to the king, yet none were ashamed ;

None prayed unto God, yet no one blamed ;

None weighed out silver or counted gold ;

Nothing was bought, and nothing sold ;

None would give, and none would take,
No one answered, and no one spake.
There were crowds on crowds, and yet no din,
Sinner on sinner, and yet no sin ;
Poverty was not, nor any wealth,
None knew sickness, and none knew health ;
None felt blindness, and none saw light,
There were millions of eyes and yet no sight ;
Millions of ears and yet no hearing,
Millions of hearts, and yet no fearing ;
None knew joy, and none knew sorrow,
Yesterday was the same as to-day and to-morrow.

None felt hunger, none felt thirst,
No one blessed, and no one cursed,
None wasted the hours, and none saved time,
None did any good, or committed crime ;
Grief and woe, and guilt and care,
Fiery passion and sullen despair,
Were all unknown and unthought of there :

Joy and love, and peace and bliss,
Holy affection and kindly kiss,
Were strangers there to all, I wiss.
The soldier laid aside his spear,
And was a man of peace ;
The slave forgot to fear,
And sighed not for release ;
The widow dried her tear
And thought not of her lord's decease.
The subtle brain
Of the curious priest,
To strive and strain
With thought had ceased.
Lips that like angels' sung
Moved not the air,
And the eloquent tongue
Lay dumb in its lair,
Behind the closed gate of the teeth :
The flute-like throat
Uttered no note,

And the bosom swelled not with the breath.

No mourning nor crying,

No sobbing nor sighing,

None weeping over the dead or the dying

Were heard on the way :

No singing, no laughing,

No joying, no daffing,

No reveller's glee when carousing and quaff-
ing,

Nor children at play :

None shouted, none whispered ; there rose not a hum

In that great city of the deaf and dumb.

They left her there among the rows

Of royal dead to find repose,

Where Silence with her soundless wings

Hovers o'er sleeping queens and kings,

And each in dumbness steeps :

And Darkness with her sightless eye,

Gazes down through a starless sky,
And all from waking keeps.

* * * * *

Soul, I loved thee ;
Thou wert beautiful :
Soul, I served thee ;
I was dutiful :
We had been so long together,
In the fair and the foul weather ;
We had known such joys and tears
That my love grew with the years.

I was not an enemy
Unto thy salvation ;
If I sinned, I sinned with thee,
Yielding to temptation ;
Thou wert wiser,
Thou wert stronger ;
I was never thy despiser ;

•Wilfully I was no wronger—
Wronging thee I wronged myself.

I am but a broken cage,
And the eagle's fled ;
Think you he will quell his rage,
Bend his high and haughty head,
Leave the air at one fell swoop,
And with folded pinions stoop
Underneath these bars ; to droop
Once again, with sullen eye
Gazing at the far-off sky ?
He has gone his way, and I
Grudge him not his liberty.

Does the wanton butterfly
Long for her aurelia sleep,
Sicken of the sunlit sky,
Shrivel up her wings and creep
From the untasted rose's chalice,

Back into her chrysalis ?
Does she on the wing deplore
She can be a worm no more ?

The melodious, happy bee,
Will she backward ring her bell,
Grieving for a life so free,
Wishing back the narrow cell
Where a cloistered nun she lay,
Knowing not the night from day ?

Lithe and subtle serpents turning Wheresoe'er they will,
Are they full of sad repining
That they cannot now be still,
Coiled in the maternal prison
Out of which they have arisen ?

Earth to earth, and dust to dust,
Ashes unto ashes must ;

Death precedeth birth.

Infant gladness

Ends in madness,

And from blackest roots of sadness

Rise the brightest flowers of mirth.

I am but the quiver, useless

When the bolts are shot ;

But the dangling mocking scabbard

Where the sword is not.

I am like a shattered bark

Flung high up upon the shore ;

Gone are streamers, sails, and mast,

Steering helm and labouring oar.

River-joys, ye all are past ;

I shall breast the Nile no more.

I was once a lamp of life,

Shining in upon the soul ;

But I was a lamp of clay :

Death and I had bitter strife ;
    He hath pierced the golden bowl,
    And he sent my soul astray.
It is an immortal thing,
Far beyond his venom'd sting,
    But my life was his to win,
    And I must the forfeit pay ;
    So he poured the precious oil
    Of my very life away.

If my soul should seek for me,
    It would find me dark ;
In my leaking cup would see
    Death the quencher's mark :
Angels could not light in me
    Now the feeblest spark :
I am broken, empty, cold ;
Oil of life I could not hold.

Soul and body cannot mate,

Unless Life doth join their hands ;
And the fell divorcer sweareth
By the royal crown he weareth
And the awful sword he beareth,
That a king's are his commands.
“ Soul and body, Life shall never,
“ When my smiting sword doth sever,
“ Join again in wedlock's bands.”

I was once the trusted casket
Of a priceless, wondrous gem :
With closed lid
I kept it hid,
Till God wanted
It for his own diadem.
Unto Death he gave the key,
But he stayed not to unlock it :
If the jewel were but free,
He, the fierce one, what cared he
For the casket, though he broke it ?

Mortal throes and cruel pangs
Tore me open with their fangs,
And God took the gem to set :
But to put his mark on me
Death did not forget.
With his crushing, cruel heel,
He impressed on me his seal,
And on it these words were cut,
“ When I open, none may shut
“ Save the King, whose key I bear.”

If that gem again from heaven
Were entrusted to my care,
I could not enfold and keep it
From the chill, corrupting air ;
Could not hide it out of sight
Of the peering prying light :—
Crushed and shattered, mean and vile,
I am fit only for the funeral pile.

I am not a harp whose strings
Wait but for the quivering wings
Of the breathing Spirit-wind
Over them its way to find,
Thrilling them with its fond greeting
Till they answer back — repeating
Tone for tone ;
Adding others of their own.
All my chords are tangled, broken,
And their breaking is a token
That, if now the wind-like spirit
    Should come longing back to me,
It would vainly try to elicit
    Note or any melody.

Life once by me stood and wound
Each string to its sweetest sound,
    But Death stole the winding key
    And it would be woe to me
If my soul from heaven should come

But to find me hushed and mute,
Soundless as a shattered drum,
Voiceless as an unblown flute,
Speechless as a tongueless bell,
Silent as an unstrung lute,
Dumber than a dead sea shell :
I could not even as a lisper,
Utter back the faintest whisper,
Were it but to say farewell.

Archangelic trumpet sounding,
Thou shalt wake us all ;
On the startled universe
Shall thy summons fall ;
And the sympathising planets
Shall obey thy call,
Weeping o'er their sinful sister,
Stretched beneath her funeral pall.
Earth thou wert baptized in light,
When the Spirit brooded o'er thee ;

Fair thou wert in God's own sight,
And a life of joy before thee ;
But thy day was turned to night,
And an awful change came o'er thee.
Then thou wert baptized again ;
In the avenging, cleansing flood,
Afterward for guilty men
Christ baptized thee with his blood ;
Yet to efface the stain of crime
God shall light thy funeral pyre,
And the fourth and final time
Thou shalt be baptized with fire.

V. THE SLEEP.

Over the Necropolis and the land of Egypt the seasons and the centuries pass, producing their changes in Nature, celestial and terrestrial, and in all human history ; everywhere there is the same unvarying alternation of Life and Death ; and through all this monotony of change the Dead sleep, awaiting with irrepressible yearnings their Resurrection.

THE shadow of the pyramids
Fled round before the sun :

By day it fled,
It onward sped ;
And when its daily task was done
The moon arose, and round the plain
The weary shadow fled again.

The sphinx looked east,
The sphinx looked west,
And north and south her shadow fell ;
How many times she sought for rest
And found it not, no tongue may tell.

But much it vexed the heart of greedy Time
That neither rain nor snow, nor frost nor hail,
Trouble the calm of the Egyptian clime ;
For these for him, like heavy iron flail,
And wedge and saw, and biting tooth and file,
Against the palaces of kings prevail,

And crumble down the loftiest pile,
And eat the ancient hills away,
And make the very mountains know decay.

And sorely he would grudge, and much would carp,

That he could never keep his polished blade,
His mowing sickle keen and sharp,

For all the din and all the dust he made.
He cursed the mummies that they would not rot,

He cursed the paintings that they faded not,
And swore to tumble Memnon from his seat ;
But, foiled awhile, to hide his great defeat,
With his wide wings he blew the Libyan sand,
And hid from mortal eyes the glories of the land.

Then he would hie away
With many a frown,

And whet his scythe
By grinding Babylons down;<sup>1</sup>
And chuckle blithe,
As, with his hands
Sifting the sands,
He meted in his glass
How centuries pass,
And say, "I think this dust doth tell Whoever faileth, I work well."

Round the great dial of the year
The seasons went and struck the quarters,
Whilst the swift months, like circling hours,
Told the twelve changes by their changing flowers;
And the great glaciers from the mountain tops,
Where the bold chamois dare not climb,

<sup>1</sup> Similar reference in Hood's poems.

Silently sliding down the slopes,
Marked the slow years upon the clock of Time.

The burst of revelry was heard no more
Along the Nile ; nor near its reedy shore
The pleasant plashing of the dipping oar :
Nor cry of sailor unto sailor calling,
Nor music of the hammer on the anvil falling,
Nor song of women singing in the sun,
Nor craftsmen merry when their work is done :
The trumpet all was hushed, the harp was still,

And ceased the hum of the revolving mill :
The sound of solitude alone was there,
And solemn silence reigning everywhere.

The sun, the mighty alchymist,
With burning ardour daily kissed
Earth's dusky bosom into gold :

And when at eve
He took his leave,
Again his eager lips grew bold,
And on her dark'ning brow and breast
His strange transmuting kiss impressed.

The moon ! she hath hermetic skill,
As nightly every shadow told ;
She cannot change all things to gold,
But she hath skill, and she hath will,
To turn to silver blackest hill
And deepest shade and darkest pile ;
And night by night,
The gloomy Nile,
A sea of light,
Smiled to her smile.

A million times, by days of men,
The earth her silver robes put off,
Only her golden train to doff
In shortest time again.

Link by link, and ring by ring,
Each day and night a link would bring :
The sun ! a ring, all golden-bright,
The moon ! a link, all silver-white ;

And so the twain

Wove at the chain

Which they have woven all the way,
Since first was night, and first was day.
It girdleth round the earth, and then,
Swift passing from the abodes of men,
It all transcendeth human ken
To trace it back, it goes so far,
Up to the dawn of time,
Beyond the farthest star.

In the lost past

It hangeth fast,

Held by the hand of God ;
And angels, when they wish to know
How time is moving here below,
Come floating down on half-spread wings,

And see the steps our earth has trod,
By counting the alternate rings
That mark the day
And mark the night,
Since God said " Be "
And there was light.
The azure sky a garden lay,
In which at mid-day seed was sown ;
It peeped at eve, at twilight budded,
And, when the day had passed away,
The buds were burst, the leaves were blown,
And starry flowers the midnight studded :
Quick bloomed they there,
Too bright and fair
Not to be taken soon away :
Thick through the air
Rained they,
In blazing showers,
Their meteor-flowers,

And withered at the dawn of day.
They were not blotted from the sky !
They faded, but they did not die :
Each in its azure-curtained bed
In stillest slumber slept ;
Whilst, glancing far,
The evening star
A wakeful vigil kept,
Till, when the setting sun withdrew,
The appointed sign was given,
And each grew up and bloomed anew,
And glorified the face of heaven.

Swift comets fled across the sky,
Like murderers from the wrath of God,
With frenzied look, and fiery eye
(For swift behind the avenger trod),
And long, dishevelled, trailing hair,
Seeking in vain to find a lair,
Where they could hide their great despair.

They sought the very bounds of space,
But dared not for a moment stay ;
The dread Avenger's awful face
Waited before them on the way :
They turned, their footsteps to retrace ;
They thought they flagged not in the race,
But shuddered as a mighty force,
Which none could see, but all could feel,
Checking their wild eccentric course,
Bade them in lesser circles wheel :
The judgment had gone forth that they Should feed the burning sun :
They felt that vengeance had begun
Which, though it suffered long delay,
Would sternly smite and surely slay
When their appointed race was run.
And some there were of gentler sort,
With slower step, of lowlier port,
With smoother locks and calmer eye,
Who, shooting by the startled sky,

Or gleaming through the midday blue,
On errands sent which no one knew,
Came—none knew whence, went—none knew where,
The gipsies of the upper air.

So whirled those stars, whilst worlds of men
    Died ere the time of their returning ;
Yet they failed not to come again,
With unquenched tresses fiercely burning,
And, round a smaller area turning,
    Flew like doomed things to meet the ire
    That gave them to eternal fire.

And, as they left the sleeping pair,
    They found them still at each returning
Down in the darkness, keeping there
    An everlasting mourning.
They would have thought the baleful light

Of comets a delightful sight,
And joyed to gaze up at their hair,
Waving malignant in the air.
But not the faintest flickering gleam
Of all their blinding glare,
Not one adventurous errant beam,
Could grope its way adown the stair
That led to their sepulchral room,
Or find a chink within their tomb,
By which to show to spell-bound eyes
The terrors of the midnight skies.

The ibis gravely stalking
As a self-appointed warden,
Through every valley walking,
Went through and through the garden ;
And with his curvèd bill,
Like a reaper's sickle hook,
On every noxious thing
A speedy vengeance took.

White pelicans came sailing
Like galleys down the stream ;
And the Peacock raised the wailing
Of his melancholy scream,
From the lofty temple-summits
Where he loved to take his stand,
As if to catch a glimpse
Of his far-distant land.
And the sober matron geese,
Now swimming and now wading,
Now paddling in the mud,
And now on shore parading,
Moved, discoursing to each other
With their mellow trumpet-voices,
Each with native music telling
Of a creature that rejoices ;
Till some leader's shrillest signal,
As of sudden foe invading,
Stopped the babble of their tongues,
And their careless promenading,

As they rose in steady phalanx
Unfurling in the air,
Like the banners of an army
When they hear the trumpet's blare ;
And now they kept together
Like a fleet of ships at sea,
When they fear not stormy weather
Or foe from whom to flee ;
And then they scattered far and wide,
Like ships before a gale,
When naked masts stand up on deck
With scarce a single sail ;
And now their phalanx like a wedge
Went cleaving through the air,
And then it was a hollow ring,
And then a hollow square.
So ! free through sea, and earth, and sky,
With web, and foot, and wing,
They lowly walked, or soared on high,
And none disturbed their travelling.

They wandered at their own wild will Till daylight died and all was still,
And then a summons clear and shrill
    Led them all back with weary wing,
        To rest in peace
        Till night should cease,
Lulled by the Nile's low murmuring ;
And in the garden's ample ground
They each a welcome haven found.

The garden was all full of life,
    All filled with living things ;
Life in the earth and air,
    On bird and insect wings ;
Life swimming in the river,
    Life walking on the land,
The life of eye and ear,
    And heart, and brain, and hand.
Life ! in the lichen sleeping,
    Life ! in the moss half-waking,

A drowsy vigil keeping ;
Life ! in the green tree taking
Its free course as a river ;
Life, making each nerve quiver
In the eagle upward soaring :
Life, flowing on for ever,
Its waters ever pouring
Into that grave of death, which we Count as an all-devouring sea ;

Dark are its depths, but they cannot retain

Aught that was living ; it will not remain :
Down in the darkness it hateth to stay ;
Upward it riseth, and cleaveth its way
Out of Death's midnight into Life's day.
Fire from God's altar rekindleth its flame, Effaceth Death's mark and removeth his stain,
Clothes it afresh and changeth its name,

Nerves it anew to pleasure and pain,
And sendeth it back to the place whence it came :

Thither it speeds and returneth again,

Like the wave of the lake

And the foam of the river.

Which as clouds from the sea

The sun doth dissever.

He bathes them in glory,

He clothes them in light,

He weaves for them garments of every hue :

They tire of the glory,

They steal from his sight,

They drop on the earth as invisible dew.

They return to the lake,

They revisit the river,

Like arrows shot up

Which come back to their quiver.

As the cloud was the sea,

And the sea was the cloud,

So the cradle of Life
Is wrapped in Death's shroud.
The Life cometh down
As the rain comes from heaven ;
To flow is its law ;
To Death it is given.
The Life riseth up
As a cloud from Death's sea ;
It changeth its robe,
From decay it is free ;
It mocketh at Death,
It breaketh his chain ;
And the clouds in the sky
Come after the rain.
Life's a spender,
Death's a keeper ;
Life's a watcher,
Death's a sleeper ;
Life's a sower,
Death's a reaper ;

Life's a laugher,
    Death's a weeper ;
Life's an ever-flowing river,
    Death's an ever-filling sea ;
Death is shackled,
    Life is free ;
Death is darkness,
    Life is light ;
Death is blindness,
    Life is sight ;
Life is fragrant,
    Death is noisome ;
Death is woeful,
    Life is joysome ;
Life is music,
    Death is soundless ;
Death is bounded,
    Life is boundless ;
Death is lowly,
    Life hath pride ;

Death's a bridegroom,
Life's the bride ;
Death's the winter,
Life's the spring ;
Life's a queen,
But Death's a king ;
Life's a blossom,
Death's its root ;
Death's a seed,
And life's its fruit ;
Death is sown,
And life upsprings ;
Death hath fetters,
Life hath wings.

So in endless iteration,
Through the long protracted ages
Rose their wailing alternation ;
Like the murmur that presages

Rising tempests, ere their fullest fury rages,
Rose and fell
Its plaintive swell,
Like the mourning one doth hear,
Listening with attentive ear
To the sighing of a shell,
Orphaned from its mother sea,
Where it longs again to dwell,
Weary of its liberty.

So they panted for the light ;
Yearnèd for the living day,
Sick of silence, tired of darkness,
Chafing at the long delay ;
Till, when thrice a thousand years
Drearily had passed away,
Hope and faith fled with them too,
And they ceased to pray.

No one seemed to love or heed them,
And in dull despair they waited,
To a hopeless bondage fated,
Till the Archangel's voice should bid them
Rise upon the Judgment Day.

[Here the MS. ends—the intended final part, to be called the “Awaking,” never having been written.]

I CORINTHIANS, XIII.

HERE, as through a glass, we darkly,
Doubtfully, and dimly gaze ;
Even the brightest things have shadows,
Round the clearest hangs a haze.

They who bask within the blaze
Of the pure, unshaded rays,
In the realms of bliss,
Changèd have for doubtful vision,
Perfect sight and full fruition.

They know there, as they are known,
Christ doth claim them as his own,
Where they stand,

Round about the throne of grace,
Gazing on him, face to face,
    In the land of light,
The bright immortal land.

Faith hath there become conviction :
Happiness hath no restriction ;
Christ proclaims the benediction,
    “ Be with me, ye blest, always.”

Wand’rers once, through many mazes,
Clothed with His imputed graces,
Tears all wiped from off all faces,
    They adore Him night and day.

No one there in darkness gropeth,
No one half-despairing hopeth,
No one with the great Foe copeth,
    Christ hath taken sin away.

Tempter never there assaileth,
Charity there never faileth ;
Christ's great love for all availeth :
And the weakest cannot stray.

Sobbing is not there, nor sighing,
Grief is all unknown, and crying,
Pain is never seen, nor dying ;
Former things have passed away.

No one knoweth care, nor sorrow,
No one feareth for the morrow ;
Each eternal joy doth borrow
From the Lamb, his strength and stay.

May He whom—the sympathising
High Priest, for us agonising,
Knowing not 'twas God's devising,— Traitors did to death betray,

He who of our inmost hearts every hidden thought divineth,

And His people from their sins, like a precious ore refineth,

Give us grace that we may say,

“Darkness now hath passed away,

And the true light shineth.”

ORIGIN OF THE SNOWDROP.

No fading flowers in Eden grew,
Nor Autumn's withering spread
Among the trees a browner hue,
To show the leaves were dead ;
But through the groves and shady dells,
Waving their bright immortal bells,
Were amaranths and asphodels,
Undying in a place that knew
A golden age the whole year through.

But when the angels' fiery brands,
Guarding the eastern gate,
Told of a broken law's commands,
And agonies that came too late ;

With longing, lingering wish to stay,
And many a fond but vain delay
That could not wile her grief away,
Eve wandered aimless o'er a world
On which the wrath of God was hurled.

Then came the Spring's capricious smile,
And Summer sunlight warmed the air,
And Autumn's riches served a while
To hide the curse that lingered there ;
Till o'er the once untroubled sky
Quick driven clouds began to fly,
And moaning zephyrs ceased to sigh,
When Winter's storms in fury burst
Upon a world indeed accurst.

And when at last the driving snow,—
A strange, ill-omened sight,—
Came whitening all the plains below,
To trembling Eve it seemed—affright

With shivering cold and terror bowed—
As if each fleecy vapour cloud
Were falling as a snowy shroud,
To form a close enwrapping pall
For Earth's untimeous funeral.

Then all her faith and gladness fled,
And, nothing left but black despair,
Eve madly wished she had been dead,
Or never born a pilgrim there.
But, as she wept, an angel bent
His way adown the firmament,
And, on a task of mercy sent,
He raised her up, and bade her cheer
Her drooping heart, and banish fear:

And catching, as he gently spake,
A flake of falling snow,
He breathed on it, and bade it take
A form and bud and blow;

And ere the flake had reached the earth,
Eve smiled upon the beauteous birth,
That seemed, amid the general dearth
Of living things, a greater prize
Than all her flowers in Paradise.

“This is an earnest, Eve, to thee,”
The glorious angel said,
“That sun and Summer soon shall be ;
And though the leaves seem dead,
Yet once again the smiling Spring,
With wooing winds, shall swiftly bring
New life to every sleeping thing ;
Until they wake, and make the scene
Look fresh again, and gaily green.”

The angel's mission being ended,
Up to Heaven he flew ;
But where he first descended,
And where he bade the earth adieu,

A ring of snowdrops formed a posy
Of pallid flowers, whose leaves, unrosy,
Waved like a wingèd argosy,
Whose climbing masts above the sea,
Spread fluttering sail and streamer free.

And thus the snowdrop, like the bow
That spans the cloudy sky,
Becomes a symbol whence we know
That brighter days are nigh ;
That circling seasons, in a race
That knows no lagging, lingering pace,
Shall each the other nimbly chase,
Till Time's departing final day
Sweep snowdrops and the world away.

THE TRANCE.

Founded on a story, told in one of the Fathers, of a monk who was bewailed over as dead, and afterwards arose in life.

A FIERCE and heavy pang then shot into my swooning brain,
That sickened in the crushing gripe of that almighty pain ;
My body quivered awfully, as if the blast of death
Ran wild amid the shivering nerves, like wind on withered heath ;
And through my veins the tide of blood ran back with sullen sobbing,
And lay a cold and heavy weight upon my heart's thick throbbing ;

The fiercely struggling breath beneath my stiffened chest was drowned,
Nor aught save strangled moans there came,
of human voice or sound ;
And faded from my freezing sense the holy brethren nigh,
And the solemn prayer of faith they spake, to our Lord Christ on high,
That He would be my strength and stay,
when flesh did fail and faint,
And so it was, for in that hour the Lord was near His saint.

I felt this solemn agony was come to bid me die,
Wrestling with Time, my soul was panting for Eternity,—
I felt that it was o'er with earth, and human will and sin—

A strong pang shudders through my frame, and swiftly from within,
The spirit leaps into the light, of fair majestic feature,
With radiant form of purity, a glorious, god-like creature.

But ah ! it was a fearful thing, from ancient dwelling flown,
To feel myself all desolate, all naked and alone ;
I looked most wistfully that some kind spirit from above,
On happy wings of light, should come to cheer me with his love,
To quell my heart of crowding fears, and lead me to the rest,
Where I might dwell for evermore with God's dear children blest.

I looked, but ah ! no bright one came, my panting ardour meeting,
No cheerful sound of hastening wings, no gentle voice of greeting.
And then, woe's me ! with sick despair and drowning heart, I thought
The Lord His sinful servant had amid His works forgot,
That I was fallen from His care who died
    upon the tree,
And that for aye no dwelling place was meted out for me.

And so I went upon my way, with sad and doubting motion,
A dreary wanderer drifting forth upon a shoreless ocean !

I know not where or how I went, when—past the furthest star

That beacons from the utmost nook, where matter's limits are—

In timid quest, I swiftly pressed into the awful realm,

Whose very name is all we think, in thoughts,
that overwhelm,

Where shadows piled on shadows dwell in twilight dim and drear,

And shroud within their shuddering depths,
the Majesty of Fear!

I know not where or how I went, where going left no trace,

And stillness circled everywhere through the untrodden space ;

No echo, waking to my flight, gave semblance of a voice,

To speak in kindly fellowship, and bid my heart rejoice,

No shadows followed flickeringly upon my fleeing wing,
To break the fearsome loneliness, and seem a living thing ;
But now that God Himself no more, drew near unto my call,
I seemed myself a solitude—an awful All-in-All !

And so my heart was folded up in black dismay, like night,
And grim Despair ate greedily into my moving might,
So that I drooped and sickened there ; yet with a gloomy gliding,
I go—Jehovah's banished one—for whom is no abiding !
But lo ! all soon, with quickening joy, I inly laughed and leapt,

At the great sight that suddenly athwart my vision swept.

And yet it had no pleasant view, but, like a built Dome,
It towered, a formless giant pile, a very sun of gloom,
Raying intensest darkness forth in shadow-shapes around
Which, on the void unwilling space, no place of resting found,
But aye they trembled troublously, a wild uplifted sea,
Whose waves, like heaving midnight skies, shot terror into me.
—The place wherein that fearful twain, old
Night and Death, abode,
Infinity itself meseemed to faint beneath the load.

But yet I joyed, because I deemed a quiet place to find,

Where I might couch within the ken of blessed human kind;

And be they gentle, loving friends, or fierce and foul of might,

Yet loneliness would flee away—Oh God ! a wild delight !

But as I trembled on the verge, came creeping to my ear

A sound all thin and bodiless, as only spirits hear,

That seemed to tell the tingling tale of agony immortal—

Yet still I swiftly sped my way to win the looming portal.

Then stretched a sight before my gaze, that thrust me through with woe,

I shuddered with a shrinking fear, but backward could not go ;
I saw a hall that stretched afar in sick and yellow light,
Whose walls were reared, whose dome was hung, in chaoses of night,
And then I saw a wailing troop, a myriad crowd of ghosts,
Who sat all through its joyless length, in wan and glimmering hosts.

A stark and stony glare did aye upon their eyes remain,
And dwelt upon their frozen light a stern
unmoving pain,
That vainly struggled forth to sound, but lip and voice were sealed,
So that it found no rushing vent of agony revealed ;

Dully, as drunk with heavy grief, they crooned a wail of sadness,
Not words, but as it were a pang that wrung itself to madness,—
On through the stricken twilight gloom, with shuddering wings it rolls,
Sounding the dreary muffled dirge of wrecked and ruined souls.

All friends were there of dearest kin,—son, sister, sire, and brother—
Yet no one sought, with yearning love, to commune with another,
That he might take or lose a grief,—empty a soul of woe,—
For here the swelling fount of love was frozen in its flow;
All sympathies, all charities, the unutterable store

Of dearest joys in earthly homes, were quenched for evermore,
And here the spirit, cramped and pinched with fears, like iron chains, Brooded its own unhappy case, in sore and ghastly pains.

On through the place there moved a stream, with waters smooth and pale ;—
With slow and sullen pace it crawled, like snake with wounded trail,—
So slothfully, it seemed like Sleep just waning into Death—
Heaving from its mysterious depths a fitful whispered breath.
I wist not whether 'twas this breath, that wove my sense around,
And clung to life, uncertainly, shaping itself to sound ;

Or whether 'twas from faces foul, that glided oft along,

Lifting their gaze above the flood, and sung a passing song—

I could not tell from whence it came, but heavily and dull,

This chant rose like a drowsy cloud with killing poison full :

“ Salvation is life's speedy work, and God its cheerful giver, .

But lo ! the judgment draweth on, and it abides for ever ! ”

But, dreadest spectacle of all, I saw afar in height

A Dial-Plate whereon there stood a Shadow and a Light,

The shadow clear like starry gloom,—the brightness like the sun,

And it moved on all evenly, its course was nearly run,

For now its track had travelled on, in mute, resistless power,

And now it told the fearful tale, 'twas Time's eleventh Hour !

The day of suffrance fleeting past, the hour of mercy gone,

It told the doom of God's red wrath was darkening swiftly on.

Then as I looked I wept full sore,—Ah me !
their piteous case !

Poor souls condemned for aye to bide without the Lord His grace !

Ah pangs of dumb expressive woe ! Ah that so doleful song !

Ah cold and naked solitude amid a crowding throng !

My heart was withered like a leaf, when sudden on my ear

There dins the crush, the rapid rush, of wings that hurtled near :

Two grisly fiends drew nigh apace, upon the lowering path—

Fell brow, and eye of cruel fire, and scowl of darkening wrath ;

Within their gloating grasp was clenched a cowering, shrinking soul,

That they were hailing gleefully to dree its dismal dole.

A ghost it was of lofty look, a high immortal mien,

Telling of thought that aye had wrought where deathless deeds had been ;

But vainly dwelt that majesty like flame on eye and brow—

Vainly, a bound, discrownèd king, it wrestled on with woe ;

The battle and the victor's might were yielded to Despair,
Who like to any conqueror outspread his banner there.
They glided through the gate, each eye was raised in mournful hailing—
One moment and no more,—they sank and saddened back to wailing.
The soul was fixed and fettered down,—I looked,—too sore opprest,
A swoon around me spread its arm, and cradled me to rest.

Again I woke and looked ; my soul was wafted far away,
Like summer boat on sea afloat, forth into light like day ;
I scarce could trace that distant place of woeful sound and sight,

Sure some sweet angel of the Lord had done me this delight.

The load was off my weariness; like happy birds in spring

I fain would break in joyfulness,—I fain would leap and sing!

But who is this that standeth near, and gazeth down on me?

Who standeth near, and gazeth down, a form most bright to see;

A wingèd shape of majesty that makes my spirit bow,

The splendour of a heaven is girt around his shining brow.

I know him by his smile of love, his robèd form of glory,

A calm and silver radiance, like sunlight
now grown hoary;

I know it is an angel's eye that looketh down on me !

I know it is an angel's form, that form so bright to see !

“ Ah Sir,” said I, with tearful eye, “ doth God forget His grace ?

Forgetteth He my weary soul ? Allotteth me no place

Amid the many-mansioned House, where saints with Christ are blessed ?

Or comest thou to guide me home unto that quiet rest ? ”

Then, with a face of tender grace, he soothed
my sad estate,

God's mercy was not minishèd, His arm was still as great,

He told me that my place should yet amid the righteous be,

When that the Lord's appointed time should set me ever free,
But now, 'twas only for a space the soul had left its prison,
The body yearned e'en now again to win the life uprisen.

No more alone ! no more to roam ! But God my Father is !
My Elder Brother Jesus Christ ! The saints my kin, I wis !
Just men made perfect wait for me, and shining angels stand
To hail me to the happiness of the Immortal
Land !
But ah ! not yet ! no present sight,—a while of faith and prayer,
A while of toiling on in gloom, a while of weary care,—

I grieved to miss the holy bliss, to turn me back to pain,
So near the rich inheritance of everlasting gain.

Then said I to the Seraph blest, a fearful eye
upraising, “ Oh, might the Lord vouchsafe to me but one brief space of gazing Upon the great and many joys that ne’er grow sere with oldness,
To warm my heart, in life again, from fainting in its coldness ! ”

I trembled for the bold desire, but he in grace approveth,
“ Come thou and see His good decree for all the souls He loveth ! ”
And so I rose and followed him, on wings of blissful buoyance,

He in his smooth celestialness, my heart disturbed with joyance,
Until apace, we reached the place, and stood amidst its calm,
And I could feed my yearning need upon its bliss and balm.

A meek and pleasant air there hung around it and above,
Like zephyrs that had fallen asleep with over-much of love,
And ever softly through this air floats, like a dreamed delight,
A linkèd joy of fragrances, and breathèd sounds, and sight :—
Ah ! young and feeble ecstasies, like orphaned babes they go Forth to the charmèd solitude, with trembling steps and low.

For 'tis a spring's first quietness,—these are her budding life,
The flowers are in their vernal bloom, 'tis they make odours rife,
Small notes are stirred from every bird amid its hidden nook,
And tremulous with infant fear singeth each little brook.
Thus all was very peacefulness :—but yet the quiet told
Of hoping for a summertime of life more free and bold.

There was another stillness there,—Morn with a gentle tread
Walked like an awèd living one who goes among the dead ;
It was a dawn most beautiful,—no dank and misty gloom,

But fair and pearly radiance ywove with golden bloom.

No tumult here of gushing life, no noise of stirring might,

But all are swaddled in the calm that dwells amid the light.

Yet wait, in silent patientness, these tender lines each one,

For days so great upguided strength, its glory, and its sun.

And lo ! afar, a morning star, gemming the upper air,

As if it saw the coming joy, now it is very fair,—

With invoiced look, like Gospel book, preacheth what it doth see,

The bliss, the bliss, the happiness of what is yet to be !

'Twas here the chosen people dwelt—'twas here I saw them stay, Starring the place, whose far embrace circled their great array,
Amid its fair beatitude, in raiments meekly white,
And looks that wore a blessedness beneath the gentle light.
Some walked in twinèd companies, of mild and musing rest,
And thoughts of kindred pleasantness were nursed in every breast,
Some dwelt apart, and fed their heart on bliss in mute employ,
Like waters, which by winds unkissed, lapt in a lonely joy.

Ah, woe is me ! Ah, woe is me ! a man of lips unclean,

How shall I tell of God's delights in that most quiet scene ?

How speak of that dear myriad throng, how of the glory tell ?

How of the holy happiness, which is ineffable ?

But yet their joy did not ascend to high triumphant swells,

Nor soared in clear uplifted voice like holy Sabbath bells,

Yea, it was not the confidence of loud ecstatic faith,

As one who in the full reward his high rejoicing saith,

But seemed a hushed and trembling thought to make it calm and mild,

Like bliss that Christ in heaven sends down upon a sleeping child,

And still they bore a silent depth of dumb
unuttered feeling,

That steeped their looks in quietude, which was its sole revealing.

I saw the dear regained joy of some, whose love had birth

And cradling in the changefulness of ancient times on earth,

I saw how it was hallowed here to an immortal strength,

Amid the yearning fellowship of souls re-knit at length,

But it was love which mutely strong upon their spirits wrought,

That lay in undecaying rest beneath eternal thought.

But as I gazed in earnestness, came, through the breathless air,

Some low and wafted echoings of music very fair,

As if they strayed from heaven, exiled from the incessant choirs,
Who sing the songs they deftly sing unto their chiming lyres ;
It was a tone of love and praise, and glided upon all,
Until they seemed to wake and stir from out their silent thrall.
And if I wis aright, this song they sent in roused accord,
Hymning unto the blessed grace of their redeeming Lord.

“ Oh world ! Oh world ! and sin that was thine
Like a cloud of black thunder it neared,
And Hell lowering on, red and dark, to our doom,
Gave the banner to Death he upreared ;
Oh ! where shall we go,
In the hour of the woe,
Till the thunder is past, and the gloom ?

“Oh the grace ! Oh the grace ! and the love of the Lamb !

It had vanquished the journeying wrath,
The blue light of Hope, it is shining above,
And the Terror is stayed on its path ;
Oh the grace that hath sought us,
And led us, and brought us,
And shielded us round with its love !

“Oh heaven ! Oh heaven ! and glory to come !
Oh how shall we stand at the bar ?
And how shall we join the immortal repose,
Whose pleasures ineffable are ?
Fear, in us and round us,
Hath pierced us and bound us,
Ençircled with sin and its woes !

“Oh the grace ! Oh the grace ! and the love of the Lamb,
It is with us and for us again,

He will watch for our souls in Jehovah's full
gaze,

And with them we ever remain ;

Our story, our story,

Shall echo in glory,

The love of the Lamb, and His praise !”

THE SKERRYVORE LIGHTHOUSE.

The Skerryvore is a very dangerous reef of rocks, chiefly under water, situated about eleven miles west of Tyree, and twenty of Iona. The name is from the Gaelic, and signifies "The Great Rock." It lies so low that it is not visible from any great distance, and it is surrounded by an almost perpetual surf, so that it has been the cause of many shipwrecks. A lighthouse was completed upon it in 1843, and the light exhibited for the first time on February 1, 1844. Its erection occupied six seasons, during which, as the engineer, Mr. Alan Stevenson, observes in the preface to his delightful account of the lighthouse, in spite of almost daily perils, no loss of either life or limb occurred. The allusion in verse xii. is to the fact that a temporary barrack erected in the summer of 1838 was totally swept away the next winter.

I.

A GOODLY band of stalwart men
Pushed off from Scotland's shore,

Their path was o'er the stormy sea,
They rowed for Skerryvore.

II.

They went not forth on vengeance bound,
Man against brother-man,
To say, "Our Might shall pass for Right,
We will because we can."

III.

They went not forth to dig for gold,
For gems or precious ore—
The very seaweed scarce can cling
To wave-worn Skerryvore.

IV.

An awful rock, it veils its head
Beneath the stormy waves,
And shatters ships, and scatters wrecks,
And hides from men their graves.

V.

That goodly band, they reached its strand,
They climbed upon that tomb;
Each took his stand, and raised his hand—
They spoke across the gloom.

VI.

“Our brothers’ cries have reached the skies,
Their blood stains all the deep;
Thou hast made many a mother mourn,
And lonely orphan weep.

VII.

“Thou shalt not kill, or do more ill,
Thou shalt be marked like Cain,
That men may see, and flee from thee
Far off upon the main.”

VIII.

Then rose the Sea in fearful wrath,
And spoke with sullen roar,

“This rock is mine, I love the dead,
I will keep Skerryvore.”

IX.

“Name not the dead, O Sea!” they said,
Of drowned thou hast full store;
Thou well canst spare to us this rock—
We will have Skerryvore.

X.

Then spake the Sea, “God gave to me,
His child,—the land to win.”
“But God gave us both land and sea,
We are His next of kin.

XI.

“And we shall fight, to try our right,
We men, and thou, the Sea,
And if thy might can quench our light,
Thou shalt the victor be.”

XII.

Six years went past, from first to last ;
They struggled with the Sea,
And when at first its fury burst,
It won the victory.

XIII.

But when the summer lull had come,
And hushed the Sea to sleep,
They watched their time, they won the rock,
And triumphed o'er the Deep.

XIV.

Day after day they toiled away,
Little at night they slept ;
With anxious eye they scanned the sky,
And careful watch they kept.

XV.

God's guiding hand was with that band,
His eye was o'er them all,

His mighty arm kept each from harm,
Not one did faint or fall.

XVI.

Tier upon tier they raised the pier ;
Slowly they built the tower,
Until at last, it mocked the blast,
And the Sea owned their power.

XVII.

And now it stands, to bless all lands,
And with its beaming eye,
It watches for the mariner,
And warns him whence to fly.

XVIII.

And sometimes on a summer eve
The Sea looks up and smiles,
And on its bosom fondly lays
The Lighthouse of the Isles.

XIX.

All free from fears, the sailor steers,
And dreads the rock no more,
The blessed light makes day of night,
The light of Skerryvore.

THE GREAT SHEPHERD.

I.

SHEPHERD of the Host of Heaven !

Who the glorious stars

Sendest through the morn and even,

Jupiter and ruddy Mars ;

Sun and moon, and planet uttering

Speech to sun and star again :

Whilst the doomèd earth is muttering

Wailings o'er the woes of men :

Listen to their peaceful bleating,

Praises of Thy name repeating.

Starry flock that climb the height

Of the zodiac and the sky,

Robed in brightness, fed on light :

By the ever-watchful Eye

Ye are seen, and ye are tended
As ye sweep,
By your fleecy clouds defended,
Through the ether's deep :
And for every lamb-like moon
There is covert where to hide
From the sultry glare of noon
By the mother-planet's side.

Dark infernal wolf may never Pluck you from the fold of God ;
His Almighty hand shall ever
Guide you with His staff and rod,
And teach you when you roam
Through the pastures of your boundless home.

II.

Shepherd ! who, the sea dividing,
Didst Thine ancient people lead ;

By Thy glorious right arm guiding

Israel and thy chosen seed.

Thou wert ever in their sight

All the long and toilsome way :

Fiery pillar shone by night,

Cloudy pillar rose by day :

Till thou brought'st them by the hand

Of Moses to the Promised Land.

To wandering ways they were addicted,

But God forgave their strange behaviour ;

In all their ways He was afflicted,

And of Himself became their Saviour ;

His heart with deep compassion teemèd

To them, although their hearts were cold ;

In love and pity He redeemèd,

And bore them all the days of old,

And filled the nations with the fame

Of His everlasting Name.

Teach, O Lord ! each blind adorer
Of Moses' law and priestly Aaron,
Who is Jacob's great Restorer,
The despisèd Rose of Sharon ;
May they see Messiah reigning,
Him of whom the prophets spoke,
And no longer Christ disdainng,
Bow beneath His heavy yoke :
Send them, as Thou didst of old,
To the only Shepherd, and the only fold.

III.

Shepherd ! who at God's great altar,
Wert the Lamb, and wert the Priest,
Who did not at suffering falter,
Till God's indignation ceased.
Thou wert not by Earth's things hirèd
From the wolf to take his prey,
By Thine own great love inspirèd
Thou didst give Thy life away :

Things more precious than of gold
Bought for us the heavenly fold.

Grant that guided by our Master

We may all go out and in,
And find green refreshing pasture,
Justified by faith from sin.

When the fearful valley, darkening

With the shadow of Death's wings,
Gapes for us, may we keep hearkening
To the cheering voice that rings
Through each dim and gloomy vaulting,
Saying, "Halt not in the race,
This must needs precede exalting ;
Let this thought each fear efface :
Not one billow shall go o'er thee,
I am on the way before thee."

Great Forerunner ! Man of Sorrow !

Priest and Prince upon Thy throne !

May we, walking in the narrow
Way provided for Thine own,
By the Spirit's blessing granted,
Fear not man nor devil's hate,
But upheld and all undaunted,
Read on the eternal gate :
"Come within : nought can us sever, Ye shall go out no more for ever."

G. W.

THE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER PUTTING OFF HIS ARMOUR AT THE GATES OF HADES.

Eph. vi. 13—17.

A SONG OF THE NIGHT DURING SICKNESS.

HELMET of the hope of rest !
Helmet of salvation !
Nobly has thy towering crest
Pointed to this exaltation.
Yet I will not thee resume,
Helmet of the nodding plume ;
Where I go no foeman fighteth,
Sword or other weapon smiteth :
All content, I lay thee down, shall gird my brows with an immortal crown.

Sword at my side ! Sword of the Spirit !
Word of God ! Thou goodly blade !
Often have I tried thy merit ;
Never hast thou me betrayed.
Yet I will no further use thee,
Here for ever I unloose thee ;
Branch of peaceful palm shall be
Sword sufficient now for me ;
“ Fought the fight, the victory won,”
Rest thou here, thy work is done.

Shield of faith ! my trembling heart
Well thy battered front has guarded ;
Many a fierce and fiery dart
From my bosom thou hast warded.
But I shall no longer need thee,
Never more will hold or heed thee.
Fare-the-well ! the foe's defeated,
Of his wished-for victim cheated :
In the realms of peace and light
Faith shall be exchanged for sight.

Girdle of the truth of God !

Breastplate of His righteousness !

By the Lord Himself bestowed

On his faithful witnesses,

Never have I dared unclasp thee,

Lest the subtle foe should grasp me ;

Now I may at length unbind ye,

Leave you here at rest behind me ;

Nought shall harm my soul, equipped

In a robe in Christ's blood dipped.

Sandals of the preparation

Of the news of peace !

There must now be separation,

Here your uses cease.

Gladly shall my naked feet

Go my blessed Lord to meet ;

I shall wander at His side

Where the living waters glide ;

And these feet shall need no guard

On the unbroken heavenly sword.

Here I stand of all unclothèd,
Waiting to be clothed upon
By the Church's great Betrothèd,
By the everlasting One.
Hark! He turns the admitting key,
Smiles in love and welcomes me;
Glorious forms of angels bright
Clothe me in the raiment white;
Whilst their sweet-toned voices say,
"For the rest, wait thou till the Judgment Day."

THE DEAD AND THE LIVING.

* * * * *

WE make them a hidden quiet room
Far in the depth of our spirit's gloom,
There, oh there, do the loved abide,
Shadowy, silent, sanctified !
Thither, oh thither, wrung with woe,
In yearning love we often go !
We see their face in its living grace,
And the dear old look of its kindness trace,
We hear the words of their tender breath,
(Are they in life or we in death ?)
But the beauty bright they were wont to have,
Is damp and dim as with the grave,
And each form a funeral garment wears,
And our eye is blind with a mist of tears.

There is piteous wail amid our meeting,
We sigh and sob our words of greeting,
We feel their arms around our heart,
In a fond and heavy twining,
And clinging so they may ne'er depart
From the gaze of our tearful pining;
And so by night and through the day
Wailing and death are ours always.—

And is it so ? is it God's decree,
That we can have only misery ?
We thank Thee, O Lord ! for the mercy
given,
In the hopes of the better life of heaven.
We praise and bless Thy lowly grace,
Our dead are alive in a pleasant place ;
That while our hearts are sore with weeping
They are safe in Thy kindly keeping,
That Thou hast told us how blest they be
In the fold of Thy great felicity.

Do we weep for them? Do our spirits mourn
They shall ne'er to our eye, to our arms return?
It is they who live, those souls alone,
Holy and happy around the Throne,
It is they should lament for us that are
From the Eternal Life so far;
With souls of sin and a feeble breath,
It is we, it is we who pine in death.

Let us then no more muse sadly back,
To the ancient times of our earthly track,
As if death like a deep and dreary river
Had drowned the joy from our hearts for ever;
Let our souls reflect—and if eyes are wet,
Be it not the tear of a vain regret—
On the blissful words which the Scripture saith
Of the excellent joys that crown the head
Of every one of the Faithful Dead!

J. M. R.

“THERE SHALL BE NO NIGHT THERE.”

Revelation, xxi. 25.

No Night ! when Toil's demands,
Finished or not, must cease,
And Labour's iron hands
Be folded up in peace.

No Night ! no night at land,
No starless night at sea,
When help is none at hand,
To windward, or to lea.

No Night ! of rain and cold,
Of hunger and of thirst,
Of woes and pangs untold,
By want and famine nursed.

No Night ! no life all night
By blindness suffered here,
With eyes bereft of sight,
And steps beset with fear.

No Night ! no waking night ;
When slumbers flee away,
And watchers long for light,
And wait the wished-for day.

No Night ! when moments know
An age's weary span ;
As if the sun would show
His face no more to man.

No Night ! when pain to bear
Through daylight heart we keep,
Till Darkness from his lair
Rises and murders sleep.

No Night ! when fearful dreams
The troubled soul oppress,
Till waking anguish seems
By far the less distress.

No Night ! when memory's cells
Open with all their woes ;
And vain are subtlest spells,
Their open doors to close.

No Night ! when pale Remorse
Beckons to grim Despair,
And vengeful noises hoarse
Accusing fill the air.

No Night ! no earthly night,
All shadows done away,
The Lamb Himself the light,
And an eternal day !

G. W.

ON SOME BEAUTIFUL LITTLE SHELLS
ARRANGED IN GROUPS.

YE pearly shells,
That from the deep sea wells,
Where brooding darkness ever dwells,
    Have risen to the light of day,
Who fear no more
The breakers dashing on the angry shore,
Or the first tempest's fiercest roar
    Or the wild wintry spray,
    To me ye seem,
Whilst thus a Sabbath ye for ever keep,
Like infants, whose soft-breathing sleep
    Is only broken by some pleasing dream,

In which a bending angel sips
A kiss from those small smiling lips,
And leaves behind an added grace
To rest upon the fair young face.
Or rather are ye like a band
Of saints in the immortal land,
Who through deep waters long had passed ;
On whom dark waves their wrath had cast,
Who in the whirlpools of despair,
Had bidden farewell to God's bright air,
And yet are safe in heaven at last.
Ye fair bright things !
It seems to me
That ye must listen
To the far-off sea,
Then wake a moment, and with keener zest
Sink back again to graceful rest ;
Like sailors sleeping on the shore,
Who sleep the sounder

Because at times awaking,

They catch the rolling of the distant thunder,

And the hoarse billows on the high cliff breaking,

And hear them say, above their sullen roar,

“Sleep on, ye are at sea no more.”

Rest is more restful than we ran before ;

Sleep is more sleepful for long tortures sore ;

Night can make brighter even the brightest light :

Blindness makes clearer even the clearest sight ;

Peace is more peaceful after bitter strife ;

And death the only gate of endless life.

May she whose graceful hand

Hath given you bright repose,

In God's good time be joined to those
Who from all change are free,
And rest all safe within that land
Which never can be vexed by storms,
Because it hath no sea !

G. W.

ATHANASIUS CONTRA MUNDUM.

O ATHANASIUS! thy too subtle creed
Makes my heart tremble when I hear it read,
And my flesh quivers when the priest proclaims
God's doom on every unbeliever's head.

Yet I do honour thee for those brave words
Against the heretic so boldly hurled,
"Though no one else believe, I'll hold my faith,
I, Athanasius, against the world."

It was not well to judge thy fellow men,
Thou wert a simple mortal like us all;
Vengeance is God's; none but Himself doth know
On whom the terrors of His wrath will fall.

But it was well, believing as thou didst,
Like standard-bearer with thy flag unfurled,
To blazon on thy banner those brave words,
“ I, Athanasius, against the world.”

Thy faith is mine ; but that is not my theme ;
’Tis thine example I would preach to all ;
Whatever each believes, and counts for true,
Of things in heaven or earth, or great or small,—

If he believe it, let him stand and say,
Although in scorn a thousand lips are curled ;
“ Though no one else believe, I’ll hold my faith,
Like Athanasius, against the world.”

G. W.

ANGELS.

DROOP not thus, O feeble saint,
Lift thy head, and be of cheer,
Thou of spirit sad and faint,
Calm thy sighing, stop thy tear ;
Blessed angels, round abiding,
Give thee light, and love, and guiding.

Glorious from the bliss above,
Oh, those legions armed and strong !
Stout in valour, great in love,
They shall keep thy soul from wrong :
Them thy God and theirs hath given,
To protect thee into heaven.

They, too, once were tried and proved,
Thus they sorrow in thy grief,
Now in power and grace unmoved,
They shall bring thee blest relief;
Shield thy soul from foes infernal,
Till thou reach the life eternal.

'Mid thy goings by the light,
They are with thee by the way;
O'er thy slumbers through the night
Still they stoop in white array;
With a watch and ward unsleeping,
All the Lord's belovèd keeping.

When the floods are loud and high,
And thy soul is like to drown,
Hark! they say, "Thou shalt not die!"
Lo! they point thee to the crown,
Then in this thy tribulation
Work for thee a great salvation.

When the time of death is near,
Angels shall be round thy head,
Stay thy soul amid its fear,
Give thee songs upon thy bed ;
Thou shalt hear their tones of blessing,
Feel their arms of kind caressing.

When thou comest from thy clay,
They shall soothe thy trembling eye,
Teach thy foot the heavenward way,
Help thy wing unto the sky,
Bring thee to the blissful vision,
Perfect praise and full fruition.

Through the unceasing years above,
Thou shalt with the angels be,
'Mid the glory and the love,
Join immortal jubilee ;
With them loving, with them gazing,
Mingle tones of endless praising.

THE CHRISTIAN'S THREE BURDENS.

2 Cor. v. 4; Matt. x. 38; 2 Cor. iv. 17.

I.

BURDENS three to bear have we ;
Two in time,
And the third when we shall climb
Upwards to eternity.

First there is that load of sin,
Which the cross has taken away ;
But which we at once begin
On our arms again to lay.

Holy Spirit ! leave us not,
Though we have Thee sore offended,

We had never hated sin,
Hadst Thou not on us descended ;
Through Thee we began,
Through Thee may our course be ended.

God ! Thou mightst in justice say
That Thou wilt in wrath forget us ;
Cast us not, O Lord ! away,
Thou that didst in Christ beget us ;
Daily do we weep and pray
O'er the sins that sore beset us.

May we as we onward go,
Feel their weary burden grow
Each day smaller, each day lighter,
As the dawn grows bright and brighter,
And on each dark hill and hollow,
Clearer footprints bid us follow—
Him whose bleeding feet have trod

Such a wondrous path to God,
That the lowliest strange wayfarer,
If in His great love a sharer,
Though he be a fool and blind,
Will not fail that path to find.

II.

Blessed art thou ! second burden ;
Cross of sorrow ! load of woe !
Steadier walks he with thee laden,
Though perhaps he walketh slow.

We will not on bosom wear thee,
As a symbol pain expressing,
But will lift thee up and bear thee,
On our shoulder heavy pressing
With thy sharp edge ; sore distressing
Flinching flesh, and heart oppressing.

Steep the hill is : none would dare it.
Great the load is : none would bear it,
Were it not that He doth share it,
Who once bore a cross all weighted,
With each hateful thing and hated ;
With the sins of all men freighted.

Unto us He seems to say :

“ Dark the road is, long the way,
And thou knowest not the length,
But forget not, as thy day
So shall be thy strength.”

Is there aught more by us needed ?

Is there anything deficient ?

Christ's own strength in us made perfect,
And His grace for us sufficient.

III.

Load of sin ! the Jordan river,
Shall from us thy burden sever ;

Cross of sorrow ! thou shalt break,
When our heavenward flight we take.

Guided by our Saviour's leading
Through the happy gate ;
Lo ! of glory "an exceeding
And eternal weight,"
Shall on us from God descending,
Be the sign of joy unending.

None shall faint beneath that load ;
None shall wish it taken away :
Each shall joy that it grows heavier
Through the eternal, nightless day.

As an infant hushed to rest,
By its soft and gentle pressure
On its mother's loving breast,
Gives to her the greatest pleasure,
Telling her each hour how she
Is blessed in her maternity.

So the saints weighed down with glory
In the happy land,
Shall the more erect and firmly
Round the throne of glory stand.
It shall be a weight assuring
Them alike of joy that is,
Of the deepest present bliss,
And of bliss through all enduring.

“Light afflictions” once thought heavy
In the darkened earthly state,
Shall not then seem worth the heeding,
Overwhelmed by the exceeding
And eternal glorious weight,
Which shall sink them out of sight,
Out of memory, out of thought ;
So that none shall know to find them
Wheresoe’r they may be sought.

Even so ! resigned and still,
Let us lowly wait ;

Come to all our Saviour will,
Come He quickly, come He late;
And exchange their weary burdens,
For the eternal glorious weight.

LINES ON DR. JOHN REID.*

DEATH has at length released thee,
Thou brave and patient one !
The unutterable pangs are past,
And all thy work is done.

Thou wert a Daily Lesson
Of Courage, Hope, and Faith ;
We wondered at thee living,
And envy thee thy death.

Thou hast gone up to Heaven
All glad and painless now,
The long-worn look of anguish
Has left thy noble brow.

* Late Chandos Professor of Medicine in the University of St. Andrews.

Thou wert so meek and reverent,
So resolute of will,
So bold to bear the uttermost,
And yet so calm and still,—

We think of thee with sorrow,
Thy sad untimely end ;
We speak of thee with pity,
Our sore-tried suffering friend.

We cheat ourselves with idle words,
We are the poor ones here ;
Sorrow and Sin and Suffering still Surround our steps with fear

Our life is yet before us,—
The bitter cup of woe,
How deep it is, which each must drink,
No one of us doth know.

The Shadow of the Valley,
Whose gateway is the tomb,
Spreads backwards over all of us
Its curtain cloud of gloom.

Some stand but at the inlet,
And some have passed within,
O'er all the shadow hourly creeps,
And we move further in.

Thou art beyond the shadow ;
Why should we weep for thee ?
That thou from Care, and Pain, and Death,
Art set for ever free.

Well may we cease to sorrow ;
Or, if we weep at all,
Not for thy fate, but for our own,
Our bitter tears should fall.

'Twere better still to follow on
The path that thou hast trod,
The path thy Saviour trod before,
That led thee up to God.

LINES ON PROFESSOR EDWARD FORBES.

EDWARD FORBES was born in the Isle of Man in February, 1815, and died near Edinburgh on the 18th of November, 1854, in his 40th year, six months after his appointment to the Regius Chair of Natural History in the University of that city. His great and varied gifts and accomplishments, his remarkable discoveries, and his singularly lovable, generous, and catholic spirit, made him an object of esteem and affection to a very wide circle of friends, and a still wider circle of acquaintances. All were exulting in the prospect of the long and honourable career which awaited him, when, in the height of his glory and usefulness, he was suddenly stricken by a fatal disease, and died after a brief illness.

The following lines seek to apply, mutatis mutandis, to the mystery of the great Naturalist's death, certain canons which he enforced in reference to the existence of living things, both plants and animals. Their purport was, to teach that an individual plant or animal cannot be understood, so far as the full significance of its life and death is concerned, by a study merely of itself; but that it requires to be considered in connexion with the variations in form, structure, character, and deportment, exhibited by the contemporary members of its species spread to a greater or less extent over the entire globe, and by the ancestors of itself, and of those contemporary individuals throughout the whole period which has elapsed since the species was created.

He further held, that the many animal and vegetable tribes or races (species) which once flourished, but have now totally perished, did not die because a "germ of death" had from the first been present in each, but suffered extinction in consequence of the great geologic changes which the earth had undergone, such as have changed tropical into arctic climates, land into sea, and sea into land, rendering their existence impossible. Each species, itself an aggregate of mortal individuals, came thus from the hands of God, inherently immortal; and when he saw fit to remove it, it was slain through the intervention of such changes, and replaced by another. The longevity, accordingly, of the existing races can, according to his view, be determined (in so far as it admits of human determination at all) only by a study of the physical alterations which await the globe; and every organism has thus, through its connexion with the brethren of its species, a retrospective and prospective history, which must be studied by the naturalist who seeks fully to account even for its present condition and fate.

Those canons were applied by Edward Forbes to the humbler creatures; he was unfailing in urging that the destinies of man are guided by other laws, having reference to his possession individually of an immaterial and immortal spirit.

The following lines, embodying these ideas, contemplate his death, solely as it was a loss to his fellow-workers left behind him: their aim is to whisper patience, not to enforce consolation.

THOU Child of Genius ! None who saw
The beauty of thy kindly face,
Or watched those wondrous fingers draw
Unending forms of life and grace,
Or heard thine earnest utterance trace
The links of some majestic law,
But felt that thou by God wert sent Amongst us for our betterment.

And yet He called thee in thy prime,
Summoned thee in the very hour
When unto us it seemed that Time
Had ripened every manly power :
And thou, who hadst through sun and shower,
On many a shore, in many a clime,
Gathered from ocean, earth, and sky,
Their hidden truths, wert called to die.

We went about in blank dismay,
We murmured at God's sovereign will ;
We asked why thou wert taken away,
Whose place no one of us could fill :
Our throbbing hearts would not be still ;
Our bitter tears we could not stay :
We asked, but could no answer find ;
And strove in vain to be resigned.

When lo ! from out the Silent Land,
Our faithless murmurs to rebuke,
In answer to our vain demand
Thy solemn Spirit seemed to look ;
And pointing to a shining book,
That opened in thy shadowy hand,
Bade us regard those words, which light
Not of this world, made clear and bright :—

“ If, as on earth I learned full well,
Thou canst not tell the reason why

The lowliest moss or smallest shell
Is called to live, or called to die,
Till thou with searching, patient eye,
Through ages more than man can tell,
Hast traced its history back in Time,
And over Space, from clime to clime ;

“ If all the shells the tempests send,
As I have ever loved to teach :
And all the creeping things that wend
Their way along the sandy beach,
Have pedigrees that backward reach
Till in forgotten Time they end ;
And may as tribes for ages more,
As if immortal strew the shore ;

“ If all its Present, all its Past,
And all its Future thou canst see,
Must be deciphered, ere at last
Thou, even in part, canst hope to be Able to solve the mystery

Why one sea-worm to death hath passed :
How must it be, when God doth call,
Him whom He placed above them all ? ”

Ah, yes ! we must in patience wait,
Thou dearly loved, departed friend !
Till we have followed through the gate,
Where Life in Time doth end ;
And Present, Past, and Future lend
Their light to solve thy fate ;
When all the ages that shall be,
Have flowed into the Timeless Sea.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

HIGH and glorious is the station,
Christian soul, on thee bestowed,
Champion of the great salvation,
Soldier of the Eternal God—
Fronting, on this earth of ours,
Principalities and powers.

Trustful in thy great alliance,
Take thy helmet, sword, and shield—
Fill thy soul with stout defiance,
Go, approve thee in the field ;
Summon all thy bravest might,
Play the man amid the fight.

He who sitteth in the Heaven
On thy combat's course doth look,
How thou'st fought, and bled, and striven,
Writes a record in His book ;
Show thyself by deeds of fame
Worthy warrior for His name.

Through thy time of much endurance
Thou mayst hold a fearless front,
Since thy spirit hath assurance
God is with thee in the brunt ;
Helpful angels, standing near,
Nerve thine arm and quell thy fear.

Fierce though be thy tribulation,
Thou shalt tread upon the foe ;
Christ doth make His chosen nation
Conquering and to conquer go :
With that Captain of renown,
Thou shalt surely win the crown.

Though thy foes make fierce assailing,
Keep thou calm and faithful breast ;
Though thy heart and flesh are failing,
Yet thou must not dream of rest :
God shall bring thine hour of peace—
He shall give thee swift release.

Lo ! the pearly gates of brightness,
They are open—they are near !
Thou mayst catch the robes of whiteness—
Mayst the song of glory hear !
Go, thou victor of the Lord,
To the exceeding great reward !

CAMERA OBSCURA.

SILENT, dimly-lighted chamber
Where the sick man lies,
Death and Life are keenly fighting
For the doubtful prize,
While strange visions pass before
His unslumbering eyes.

Few of free will cross thy threshold ;
No one longs to linger there ;
Gloomy are thy walls and portal ;
Dreariness is in the air ;
Pain is holding there high revel,
Waited on by Fear and Care.

Yet, thou dimly-lighted chamber,
From thy depths, I ween
Things on earth, and things in heaven,
Better far are seen
Than in brightest broad daylight
They have often been.

Thou art like a mine deep sunken
Far beneath the earth and sky,
From the shaft of which, upgazing,
Weary workers can descry,
E'en when those on earth see nothing,
Great stars shining bright on high.

So within thy dark recesses,
Clothèd in his robes of white,
To the sufferer Christ appeareth
In a new and blessèd light,
Which the glare of day outshining
Hid from his unshaded sight.

Silent, dimly-lighted chamber,
Like the living eye,
If thou wert not dark, no vision
Could be had of things on high ;
By the untempered daylight blinded,
With closed eyelids we should lie.

Oh my God ! light up each chamber
Where a sufferer lies,
By Thine own eternal glory,
Tempered for those tearful eyes,
As it comes from Him reflected
Who was once the sacrifice.

G. W.

A HYMN FOR THE SICK-ROOM.

SUFFERER ! lift thy weary eye,
Help is with thee, Christ is nigh ;
God regards thee from on high.

All thy groans go up as prayers,
Through the Spirit's interceding ;
Each unworded murmur wears
At God's throne, the air of pleading :
And in all thy woes He shares,
Who was once the Victim bleeding.

Though He is, and was, all sinless,
He remembers mortal pain ;
Holy though He is, and stainless,
On His form the scars remain,

And He looketh now, though painless,
Like a Lamb that hath been slain.

He is not a great High Priest
In all sympathy deficient ;
From all human things released,
For Himself in all sufficient,
To be man He hath not ceased,
Though He is, as God, omniscient.

All thy bed, in all thy sickness,
He will make with His kind hands ;
All thy fainting, fears, and weakness,
Anxious thoughts, and fond demands,
All thy patience, faith, and meekness,
Reach Him where on high He stands.

Faint not, then ! God ever listeneth, Answereth ere the cry is sent ;

Whom He loveth, those He chasteneth,
Taketh what He only lent;
For Himself our ripening hasteneth
By His sorest punishment.

Need of patience have we all :
Only through much tribulation
Shall the holiest God doth call
Pass through their ordained probation,
And no longer dread to fall,
Certain of their soul's salvation.

LINES TO A YOUNG LADY NAMED MARY.

John xi. 28.—Luke x. 41, 42.

I.

MARY ! as thou hast the name,
Mayst thou have the temper holy
Of that kind and gentle Mary,
Who in spirit meek and lowly,
Knew no more delightful seat,
Than she found at Jesus' feet.

Costly oil with spices sweet,
Poured she on those blessed feet,
Knowing not 'twas preparation
For their cruel laceration
By each bloody nail :

Thinking not of separation,
Looking not for desolation,
Calvary's cross and lamentation,
And the mocking Jews' "All Hail!"

Thou canst not, like her, be honoured
Thus upon the Lord to wait,
Clothed in awful majesty,
Now he sits, a King in state ;
He has died, and lives and reigns
High exalted, over death and all its pains.

But if thou wilt listen calmly,
Thou mayst hear a sweet voice saying,
"Mary, rise, the Master calleth, Wondering at thy long delaying :"
Wilt not thou, with willing feet,
Run thy loving Lord to meet ?

Pray to God, and He will guide thee,
Let no evil thing betide thee,
Soothe thy sorrow, say, "Be cheerful,
Be not anxious ; be not fearful,
    Troubled about many things."
E'en where all was desolation,
Grief and deepest tribulation,
Sweetest peace and consolation
    His good Spirit brings.

Be not of this world's joys heedful ;
There is but one good thing needful—
    Pray and watch, and watch and pray,
Pray by night, and pray by day,
Pray for a believing heart,
    Till the Holy Spirit say,
"Mary hath chosen that good part,
    Which shall not be taken away."

II.

TO MARY WEeping.

WHEN within the sacred garden,
Where the Lord of Life had lain,
Mary, weeping at the tomb,
Sought her risen Lord in vain ;
Though He stood Himself before her,
Dark her eyes were, dim with tears,
And she did not know the object
Of her deepest hopes and fears.
But when once that kind word, " Mary,"
Fell upon her startled ears,
Sorrow was exchanged for gladness,
And she wiped away her tears.

So in all thy times of sorrow
Listen, and His lips will say,
" Mary ! Am I not sufficient ?
I will wipe thy tears away."

G. W.

“THERE SHALL BE NO NIGHT THERE.”

Rev. xxi. 25.

IN sweetest time of summer prime,
How swift the hours decay !
With what a fast and ruthless march
Gloom tramples o'er the day !
Puts out the light in heaven's height,
Mantles the gleaming sea,
Stoppeth the life that was so rife,
Makes dumb the voice of glee !

Come, oh my soul ! and wing thy way
Up from these dying days,
In glad surprise, with loving eyes
On a better land to gaze ;

No dreary shroud of nightly cloud
    Spoils sweet and shining noon ;
Needeth no sun that sky to run,
    No pale and changeful moon.

Jehovah God in midst thereof
    Sits on the throne for aye,
Pouring through the unbounded place
    Incessant streams of day.
The blissful throng of saintly souls
    Walk in that radiance fine,
It spreads a glory o'er their brow,
    Makes all their raiments shine.

Oh earthly mind ! oh lips of clay !
    Oh heart so cold and slow !
Ye cannot reach such thought or speech
    As can their glory show.
No weariness doth clog the limb,
    No eyelid weighs with sleep,

Singing and serving in God's house,
They happy vigil keep.

No pleasures past with yesterday ;
For morrow's morn no fears :
But one long drawn beatitude,
Unchanging through the years.

Because their souls all naked are,
Amid the unveiled light,
Most pure are they from earth's decay,
Shining all clear and white ;
They stand amid the eternal Love,
Most sweet their portion is !
Forth from God's face cometh such grace,
Making their joys like His.

No clouds, no twilight any more
Bring gloom around their ways,
They live in light, they walk by sight,
On the very Lord they gaze ;

They once had care, had toil and prayer,
Lo ! now they rest—they praise.

Amid this dim and dreary scene,
Our spirits pant and pray
Unto that band—unto that land—
Unto that ceaseless day.

Through vale of tears, 'mid night of fears,
Our footsteps long have gone ;
Because of weeping much and sore
Our hearts are sick and wan :—
Oh Light ! Oh holy Day of God,
Make haste, make haste to dawn !

CHRISTMAS WISHES,

WRITTEN ON THE BLANK LEAF OF A BOOK OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS, BELONGING TO A LADY WHO WAS CALLED BY SOME OF HER FRIENDS "THE QUEEN," IN ALLU-SION TO HER GRACEFULNESS.

MAY all fond blessings of the Christmas time,
And merry wishes of the gay New Year,
Each kindly thought that can find place in rhyme,

Be as a prayer for good about thee here :
And, best of all, may He, the King,
Who unto us a child was born,
Of whose birth-time these carols sing,
Be with thee at the early morn ;
Be with thee through the night and day,
Where'er thy footsteps bend ;

Bless thee and be with thee "always Even unto the end ;"
Till, when the lapse of far-off years
Hath brought life to a peaceful even,
These words shall fall on willing ears,
"They wait for thee in heaven."
And if perhaps there be,
As some there are, I ween,
Who wonder when they hear
Thee called "a Queen ;"
They will not wonder when they see thee stand
Close to the piercèd Side and piercèd Hand,
Among the foremost in the Royal Land
Where Death hath lost his sting,
And sin has ceased,
And each is crownèd king,
Or queen, or priest.

The robes with which our queens are graced,
The dust doth mar, and moth doth waste,

But on thy robes Decay's dull finger
Shall not, for even a moment, linger ;
The crowns which mortal princes wear,
Are fading crowns, and crowns of care,
But thou shalt bind upon thy forehead
An all-unfading circlet borrowed
From His who is the King of kings ;
And as the rolling centuries pass
    On silent, soundless, silken wings ;
When Time hath broken scythe and glass,
    And change of season never brings,
Or gay New Year, or Christmas chime ;
Thou shalt, in that immortal clime,
See day by day thy crown grow brighter,
And day by day thy robes grow whiter,
Thyself grow old, and yet grow younger,
    As thou dost reign
In the land that knows no hunger,
    No thirst, nor any pain.

TO A FLY ENCLOSED IN AMBER.*

* "A fly entombed in amber is more nobly sepulchred than any Egyptian monarch ever was."

BACON, Advancement of Learning.

BURIED within so rich a tomb,
Thy sepulchre is such a thing
Of glorious brightness, that the gloom
Which thoughts sepulchral always fling
Like cypress shadows, o'er the scene
Where the destroying hand hath been —

Are all forgotten when we gaze
On thee enshrined in such a gem,
Whose golden edges tinge the rays
Of sunlight, as it shines through them,
With tints that have a redder dye
Than ever decks the evening sky.

* These lines, and those immediately following, were written in early youth.

As the dwarf tiger casts a wistful gaze,
And fain would dip her whiskered head within,

Where golden fishes, gliding in a vase,
Flash on her greedy eye each glistening fin;
But the sphered crystal, and the icy wave
Are potent from her claws the tiny fish to save;

As the huge iceberg of the polar seas
Engulfs the mountain of a mammoth's bones,

And binds together, as the waters freeze,
A rudely mingled mass of tusks and stones,
Till hungry bears that prowl about their prey
Can only hope that summer's sun will melt the ice away;

So the grim spider, with his greedy eyes,
Shall gloat and peer, and think the form within—

Thy lifeless form—a living, breathing prize,
Which wiles and thickly woven net may win :

But thy dead stillness and unmoving feet
Match his tried cunning with unwilled deceit.

Immortal insect ! thou hast such a shrine—
So gay, so beautiful, and bright a cell—
That I could part with this warm life of mine,
If it were given in death to dwell
Embalmed in brightness—buried in the blaze
Of such a lustrous gem, as that on which I gaze !

MERMAIDS' TEARS.

PEARLS are the tears that Mermaids weep,
When they their midnight vigils keep ;
For Mermaids sigh, and sorrow too,
And weep, as well as I or you.

Perhaps you've thought, perhaps believed,
That Mermaids, when their hearts were grieved,
Wept briny tears ; 'tis even true :
'Tis they with salt the waves imbue.

But tears more precious must be shed
When those whom they have loved are dead—
The Mermen of the deep, whose charms
Have wiled the Mermaids to their arms.

And Nereids catch them in their shells,
And hide them where the sea-fish dwells,
Till years revolving tint them o'er
With hues they did not know before.

Then from the depths of eastern seas,
Where dive the swarthy Ceylonese,
The tiny shell-fish from the rude rock torn,
Through waves unwelcome to the light is borne.

The unconcious casket of a gem
Dies to adorn a diadem ;
And tears that trembled in a Mermaid's eyes
Become an English lady's prize.

G. W.

THE DEWDROP.

THE thoughtful soul doth in the dewdrop read
The image of a high and holy thing.
Shrined within the bright recess
Of some young flower's loveliness,
It doth live in quiet delight
Through the stillness of the night,
Gazing aye into the sky
With a calm and earnest eye,
Prisoning, in quivering rest,
One bright gleam upon its breast
Of the radiance that is sent
From the starlit firmament.

But when morning's gladsome birth
Pours its glory on the earth,

Then, amid the glare and splendour
Which the mounting sun doth render,
It is caught from earth away
To the blaze of cloudless day.
And though grieves the flower it left,
Of the thing it loved bereft,
With its chalice faintly stooping,
As in voiceless sorrow drooping,
Yet from each awaking bird
Blithesome notes of song are heard;
And the lark, to whom 'tis given
Most to know of that bright heaven,
Pours his pæan, sweetly wild,
Like an embodied song, exiled
From the place where seraphs' lyres
Swell the notes of hymning choirs.

TO A POLYANTHUS

WHICH GREW IN MY MOTHER'S WINDOW.

How the rich cups of that so lovely flower
Lift to the heavens their purple velvet leaves!

That every petal, freshened by the shower
Which falls in dewdrops from the slanting
eaves,

May feel the warm sap through its vessels run
In glad obedience to the glowing sun.

Each fragrant chalice breathes upon the air
A scent more sweet than censer ever flung
In clouds of incense, blinding all the glare
Of garish candles, when the mass was sung

“The long-drawn aisle” and the cathedral’s gloom

Ne’er felt the richness of such rare perfume.

With forms more graceful, and with vestments clad

Such as the haughty prelate never wore,
They give to God an adoration glad,

That well might teach us, all our souls to pour

In high-souled, earnest, heaven-uplifted prayer,
To Him who doth alike for all His children care.

TO A SOAP BUBBLE.

BRIGHT little world of my own creating,
Blown with a breath of the viewless air,
Thy fragile form, in circles dilating, Seems destined each hue of the rainbow to wear ;
The amethyst's purple is given to thee,
And the emerald's green, like the sparkling sea,
Mingles its tints with the sapphire's blue.
Thou art a sun, rich in thy brightness,
Thou art a moon, silvered with whiteness,
Thou art a planet, begirt with a glow
Of colours enamelled above and below,
As only the pencil of light can bestow.

Who knoweth now, but that each starry sphere

That silently floats in the heavens on high
Was once a gay bubble, pellucid and clear,
Before it was given a place in the sky,
And blown by the lips of some young angel, trying,

While his close feathered wings were yet tiny and frail,
By other bright things and their fashion of flying,

To learn on his own gilded pinions to sail.
For this one by one, the planets were blown,
And the bright milky way with starry gems sown ;

In the ether above no storms ever blow
To crush their frail forms, or toss to and fro
Those delicate worlds, so round in their orbits they ever shall go.

MUSIC THE BEST CHRONOMETER.

'TIS said, the planets in their circles wheeling Keep up a symphony, and changeful chime
Of moving melody, that onwards stealing
Metes out Eternity, and makes it Time.

This solemn music is the voice of heaven,
Some wandering pulses only earthward steal ;
Through love and mercy are their lapse forgiven,
That Time may have a guiding balance-wheel.

The silent shadow which the sun is chasing
Hath for the waiting ear nor voice nor tone

The noiseless image round the dial pacing,
Tells of Time's passage to the eye alone.

The shaken hour-glass, and the sands in shifting,
Fall with as light a step, as faint a sound
As feathery snow-flakes, which the wind is drifting
In ceaseless heaps upon the frozen ground.

We need not these to keep for aye repeating
What sum of time makes up an earthly day,
We know too well, and feel that no entreating
Will bind the hours that fleet too fast away.

The lapse of moments we in numbering Should mark, like heaven, by the voice of songs,
For silence suits alone the slumbering,
And dumbness only to the dead belongs.

We are living ! when the hours move sadly,
Sorrow's fetters cumbering their wings,
Wake the melody that moveth gladly
Let a cheerful finger strike the strings.

Time will mend his pace and catch the measure,
Break the bonds that made his pinions flag :
Life is short, but if it wanteth pleasure,
Who could bear its weary weight to drag ?

If the moments heedlessly are rushing,
Solemn music, as of anthems holy,
Softly will, the storm of passion hushing,
Make their tiny winglets move more slowly.

Calmly thus the hours, by music guiding,
Taught to wing a stately measured flight,
Peace will bring us, and a calm abiding
Sense of chastened innocent delight :

Till Death's cold fingers, from our shoulders taking

The cloak of care so wrapped about us here,
Shall send our spirits—earthly fetters breaking—

To learn the music of a higher sphere.

G. W.

A FRAGMENT.

WHAT do I out in the dull and silent night,
Thus faring on my way ?
As when Nature, stirred in her strong delight
'Mid the broad and flooding day—
When the gladly-conscious earth pulsed from her leaping heart
The glowing tide of strength and mirth, forth into every part,
And the force, that is the life of all the things that live,
To do the work it needs must do, did manifestly strive ;
And my eye could catch the numerous stir, and my ear the chiming glee
Of a thousand happy creatures on earth and air and sea ;

And man with busy hum, and the voice of things though dumb—
Bird, flower, and beam, and wave, tumultuously did come.

Then it was well that the living tread
Should go 'mid the living scene,
And 'twas well that I should not be as the dead,
Or as those who have never been ;
But when, as a weeded one who hangs o'er the dead in silent sadness,
Pale Night doth brood o'er the stirless earth, that breathes no more of gladness,
No laughter and no voices, no hum of many noises,
That who so rife and bold,
Save when a dim low tone, flitteth around like the whispered moan
Of that melancholy mourner old,

Or the echo of Life which Death gives back from his chambers cold ;
When the banner of brave bright hues which the sun of the day unfurled,
With the host of all moving things hath past to the nether world ;
And the tall, calm cliff with the wan light spread,
Stand like the sheeted unsepulchred dead ;
And the gay young flower, and the flashing
beam,
And the singing bird, and the flowing stream
Have been quenched in living bloom
By the dull and chilling gloom,
Then, why doth the step of life go forth on the earth—a tomb ?

ON THE EAST WIND.

OH East Wind, the accursèd !
At the pole thou wert nursèd,
    An iceberg was thy cradle ;
Thou wert swaddled in snow,
All stuck to and fro,
    With icicles sharp as a needle ;
With hail-shot thou wert christened,
And he thought no one listened,
    The white-bearded, shivering priest ;
So he called thee not North,
But he sent thee forth,
    Baptized with a lie as the East.

A deceiver thou art !
In the East without part,
In Asia or Ind,
Thou breathest not of cinnamon,
Thou smellest not of Lebanon,
Thou detestable wind.

I hate thee and scoff at thee,
But I fear to laugh at thee,
Thou cruel betrayer !
Thou tosser of waves,
And digger of graves,
And killer and slayer,
Be honest at least,
And come not from the East
But blow from the Pole ;
And if I cannot cure thee,
At least I'll endure thee,
And say on the whole,

That though cutting and cold,
Thou art open and bold,
    A deliberate smiter;
And in patience I'll rest
Till the wind from the west
    Come forth as thy fighter,
And pommels and pelts thee,
And thaws thee and melts thee,
    And chokes out thy breath ;
And I and the flowers,
Brought out by the showers,
    Will rejoice in thy death.

MUSINGS.

I AM filled with wonder great,
Musing of thy high estate,
Of the name unto thee given,
Child of God and Heir of heaven !
What then mean those sounds I hear,
Tones of weeping, words of fear ?
Thou by holy voice art told
Truths and glories manifold,
But thou art so weak and blind
In thy heart and soul and mind,
Thou art slow to understand
Of the high and better land,—
Hearing faintly dost believe,
Knowing darkly dost conceive—

Through thy shades of gross decay
Dim the heavenly radiance gleameth ;
Through thy prison-walls of clay
Dull the song of glory seemeth.

Couldst thou but make pure thy sense
From the fleshly influence,
Thou shouldst see in vision clear
How thy Father standeth near,
Hears and pities thine alarms,
Holds thee in the eternal arms ;
See how He who for thee died
Living keeps thee by His care,
Doth thy lot on earth provide,
Doth thy place in heaven prepare ;
Know the Spirit's gracious leading,
Hear His groanful interceding ;
Shining clear amid the sky,
Zion's blissful city spy,

And the unnumbered goodly throng,
    Standing round the Master's feet,
Singing the incessant song,
    Harping ever loud and sweet ;
And refrain to sigh and moan,
That the road is long and lone.

What, the way thou hast to go,
Thou poor doubter, dost not know ?
In the twinkling of an eye,
    Thou mayst stand the bliss among,
Very breath indrawn to sigh
    May be rendered back in song ;
Swift thy soul may start and flee,
Eye to eye the glory see,—
Know how bright the unshadowed Face :
Feel how sweet the unmingled grace :
See those spirits good and true,
And the angels' shining crew :

Then thy heart with theirs employ,
Swell the triumph, share the joy.

Of that bliss no longer deem
As a fable fond and vain ;
As one dealeth with a dream
Hold not thine eternal gain.
Is not that alone the real
Land of pure immortal forms ?
Is not this the dark ideal
Place of night, and clay, and worms ?

THE EOLIAN HARP,

WRITTEN FOR THE AIR "THE LAST LINKS ARE BROKEN."

THE deep tones are dying, that haunted mine ear,
Like the summer wind sighing when autumn is near,
When the Fairies are singing along the green lea,
And bright birds are winging their way o'er the sea ;

That music, revealing awhile to my heart
Each heaven-born feeling, too soon to depart,
But awakes the desire, that so witching a strain Should steal from the lyre, o'er my senses again.

FAIRY RINGS.

FAIRY rings have airy wings,
And the fays are chary things.
Once when I by Stonehenge haunted

    I could all the fairies see ;
All delighted, all undaunted,
    Both from fear and wonder free.

I was sitting in the centre
    Of the widest fairy ring,
When I saw the "good folk" enter,

    Lover each his lassie bring ;
Upwards at me each one gazed,
But they were not one amazed.

"That strange face," said they, "we know it, Harm him not, he is a poet."

Whirled they round like mad ones dancing,
Wheeled they round like horses prancing,
Dew-drop beads like jewels glancing,
    As they footed all the round ;
Very strange were the vagaries
Of these waltzing little fairies,
Musical, like blithe canaries,
    Piping clear with mellow sound.

And they whispered in my ear,
That they widened every year
That good circle, as their dear
    Children came to dancing days.
Now I cannot see a single
Fairy with his merry jingle :
Hidden in darkest den or dingle
    Are my well-beloved fays.
